The Preface.

Gentlemen!

I N the first impression of this third part, a large and A as I thought a fufficient Apologie was made, for the Writing and publishing thereof. Wherefore I shall not enlarge at this time, onely tell you that you have here laid before you, a large Catalogue of all forts of notorious Rogueries; your own confeiences may ferve as a finger in the Margin, pointing directly to the Guilt with which you are principally concern'd; to deal plainly with you, had I lived in a lefs wicked Age than this is, this Book had no're been extant; it was the vicious practices of these corrupted times, that gave it matter and form, life and being: had the evil inclinations of men extended no further, then to some wagish excursions, I should have been silent; but since Villany improves it felf daily, notwithstanding the many lamentable examples monthly attending the commission thereof. I thought good to erect this Monument of their shame and wickedness, which may ferve instead of a continuall Sessions, an everlafting Tyburn, to fright these vile miscreants from their enormous practices: I know not with what faces they can perpetrate that again, which is now for notoriously laid open to the view of the whole world; the beaftliness of their debancheries stinking above ground. But I have heard some men say, that the writing of this is not the probable way of reducing, but increasing the number of fuch persons whose enermities I have just cause to complain of: I would not have you to be so rash in your Judgments, as uncharitably to believe me to be a Seminary of Vice, and 1 2 that I creeted a Nursery for its propagation, for I must assure you I am of better principles, and that no profit whatsoever shall buy out my interest in a good conscience. What I have done is well intended, and is the product of a painful Experience, Travel, and Expence; and if you will have a little patience, you shall find (in the winding up of the bottom by the conclusion of this Story, in a sisth and last Part, which is very suddenly intended) that no crime shall go unpunished, no particular Person who hath been guilty of these vicious Extravagancies but shall have a punishment suitable to their crimes: and then I hope all persons who make use of this Book to practice debaucheries, will be induced to forbear and decline their wickednefs, left a just Judgment overtake them, as they will find it hath done thefe Extravagants. This is the true design and end of this Book in generall, and whoever makes any other use or Construction do's greatly abuse the real and true intents of their honest Monitor.

PART III.

CHAP. I.

Mrs. Dorothy rehearfes how the cheats her Lovers; who being with Child, made all that had to do with her contribute to her expense in lying in, and recompense her loft honour. She goes into the country to lay her great Belly; in her Journey the falls into the acquaintance of a crafty Old Woman (alias: a Procurer.)

MRS. Derethy having thus given me an account of her first Adventure, I received much satisfaction in the Relation; and told her that I found she was much improved in cunning since my first acquaintance with her; for I had enjoyed her without much advantage to her felf, for she had a great Belly, with little profit, not knowing who was, or were to find a Father: whereas now she had her choice of three, and money enough to boot whereby to purchase a handsome provision for herself and child. Yes, reply'd she, I did not intend to be caught again; for then it would have been my own fault, you having experienced me in the fallacies of your Sex; and therefore, as I told you, I made my bargain with all my three Friends as politickly as I could; and upon fecond thoughts, altered fomewhat of the terms I had formerly agreed upon: for whereas my first Customer had given me twenty pounds in hand, to provide me with necessaries during my time of lying in, and had agreed to provide for the Child, when it should be born: I told him I had provided a Nurse for it already that was willing to take all the charge, and discharge him from any further trouble, upon payment of fourty pounds more; to this he easily confented, and gave Bond in to me, in the name of a Friend of mine; whom I told him was the Party that would make provision for the Child.

Thus did I fettle matters with the first: and with the second I continued my bargain, of having twenty pounds down, and fifty pounds more at the birth of the Child. And my Masters Brother and I continued our old bargain of the like fum, of twenty pounds down, and fifty pounds more, to be paid at 6 moneths; neither did I discontinue my familiarities with any of them; for I managed my affairs so cunningly, that some nights I lay with my first Customer without the knowledge of my Master's Brother, from whom I endeavoured only to conceal it, and not from my second for he, as I told you, was privy to my dealings with him, and by that means only first gained his ends upon me: fometimes I lay with my fecond Customer, but it was with some regret, for I had the least affection for him of the three; but now he fince he had bled fome of his yellow pieces, and give me what I defired of him. I could not well refuse him his desires of me, neither was he fo fly as formerly; for he valued not though my Mafters Brother fometimes discovered us. for he knewthat our dealingswere not concealed from him, and therefore he was the bolder. But with my Masters Brother I was more free than ever: he having as much again for his money as either of the other, neither was it perceived by either of them; for he having the command of the house, so ordered it, that my Lodging was nearest to his; and therefore we had the more conveniency to come at one another.

We drave this trade for fome Moneths, till in the end my Mafter's Brother gaining the goodwill of his Sweet-heart, he was married to her, and then he for fome time fell off. But he had not lain with his Wife above a fortnight, but he became weary of her embraces, and renewed his love again to me; I at first withflood him, and used Arguments to diffwade him from any fuch course; but all would not do; for he told me he found but little pleafure in the cold embraces of his Wife; neither had he married her, but for her Eftate, which was confiderable; many other Arguments he used to perswade me, who was not altogether unwilling; and fo we again renewed our former pleafure; but we were necessitated to be very private, and only now and then to have a private meeting in the day time, for he was to accompany his Wife in the Night. But as privately, and craftily as we carried our felves, we were at length discovered; for my fecond Cuftomer, after he had paid for his

pleafure, was more defirous to have his penny-worths out of me, and still importuned me to interviews fo often, that I much grumbled at him; and he being a weary Fox, ftill dogg'd and watch'd me, and that fo often, that at length he found me and my Masters Brother in our ftrict embraces; he being both glad and angry, without any [by your leave] entered the Room where we were (the door being only carelefly put to) and without any words approaching the Bed whereon we lay, drew the Curtains, and faid; well, Master John (for so was his name) that sawce which is good for the Goofe, I hope will be good for the Gander; felf do, felf have; I hope, Sir, fince you have put in for your share in the pleasure, you will be share, and share like in the charge. Well, replyed Mr. Fohn, it shall be even as honest Mrs. Dorothy will have it; and thereupon removed, and fitting upon the Bed, I began to give him bad words, calling him jealous Coxcomb; and he again flew at me, telling me that I was infatiate, and that twenty would not ferve my turn; and that now he found the reason of my slighting him, for Mr. Folin; but if we would not do him Justice, he would be revenged on us both: to that Mr. Fohn replyed, asking him what he would have? I would, faid he, have my money, and my Bond again; for I fee, and find, there is little reason that I should pay for other mens Leachery; you make me provide for a Child, that, for ought I know, hath twenty Fathers; well, faid I, you have had too much for your money; and if you are grieved, amend your felf; fo I will, faid he, furioufly going away out of the Room. He being gone, Mr. Folin and I fell to confulting, what was to be done in this affair; and after many propositions, we at length agreed, that it was most convenient for me to be gone from my fervice, and to leave

London, for fome Country Habitation; left this angred Coxcomb should mischief us, by discovering our practice to Mr. Fohn's Wife, or some else, that was worfe: I was willing, and ready to take this courfe: but I told Mr. Fohn, that moneys would be wanting, to make a handsome provision for me; for as affairs now flood, there was no expecting any mony from my angred Customer, but what should be forced from him. That is true, replyed he; but fo foon as the money is due, for which he hath given you Bond, I will take course with him, and compel him to pay it; and in the mean time I will furnish you. This was that which I aimed at; and I knowing that he had lately received a large fum of money for his Wifes portion, with much eafe gained him to pay me the fifty pounds down, for which he had given me Bond, and being thus provided with moneys, and making up my pack (which was much improved fince my coming) I prepared for my departure. as yet knew not what Country to retire to, but was refolved not to go back into my own; and therefore confulted with Mr. Folin about the place; who ftill hankered after me, refolving I should not go far, but that he might eafily vifit me; appointed me a place about ten Miles from London: and becaufe he would not be suspected of going with me, nor of being any waves privy to my departure, he permitted me to take my Journy without him; he promifing in a few dayes to take the opportunity of giving me a vifit.

Thus did I leave his Brother's House; but not so abruptly, but that I had the leave of my Master and Mistres; whom I told, that my Father being sick, had fent for me immediately; and to that end, a Letter was framed by Mr. John, and brought me by a Porter.

Being now Coach'd for my Journy, I in short time arrived at the Inn, where I was appointed to ftay, till Mr. Fohn should arrive, and make better provision for me; where an Adventure befell me, which is worthy of your hearing: For among the rest of the Travellers, there was an Antient Woman, who took great notice of me, still looking towards my Apron, and eying very diligently my belly; which although it was now fomewhat greater, being about three Moneths gone with Child; yet I had endeavoured, by busking it down, and using all other means to hide it; but the Old Woman was not fo dim-fighted, but fhe difcovered the fraud; and having been a good one her felf in her time, quickly fmelt out the matter; and believed, and gueffed the caufe right, as it was; for my thinn Chops, and fharp and whitely looks gave evident testimonies of what disease I was sick of; and looking more throughly upon me, and examining the features of my buxome Countenance, she conjectured right, that fome good Fellow had got up my belly at London, and I was going into the Country to be lightned of my burthen: fhe having a while confidered with her felf, that I might be very ufeful for her in an affair she had then in hand, was very pleasant with me, defiring my further acquaintance. I was not flive for the matter, but knowing that I had money enough to bear me out in any crofs adventure that might happen, was refolved to fee what the Old Woman meant by her familiarity. She first gave me Joy of my great Belly; to which I replyed, fhe might be miftaken; well, well, faid fhe it matters not, whether I am or no; but if it be not fo, I wish it were; and methinks it is a pity that you fhould be fick of any other difease; for

I have fo much skill in Phyfiognomy, that I can tell that you are of a more Jovial Temper than now your countenance shews for, and it is very unfit, that one of your years and complexion should want the pleasures of a fit Bed-fellow; but I suppose you are not ignorant of those enjoyments, and have a Husband, with whom you have experienced the fweet of a Married Life. Truly, Madam, faid I, you are much miftaken; for I never yet entred into that honourable Estate of Matrimony. Well, that matters not much, replyed this good Old one; but I have mis'd of my aim, if you are ignorant of what I have told you; and although you may have no Husband, yet I believe you have a Friend, who has been dabling with you, and fwel'd your Belly; if it be fo, you are not the only she that is guilty of that pleasing Crime; for I my felf have been good in my time; and still have a Colts tooth in my ĥead.

Thus did the Old Dotterel initiate her acquaintance with me; and had well near put me to the blufh, but that I turned my face afide, and gently wip'd it with my Handkerchief; and then I told her she was very pleafant, and that a little in the extreams, confidering the publickness of the place (there were more Guests in the Room) and our fmall acquaintance. As for the place, faid the, I must confess, as we are not all one Womans Children, fo we ought to be fomewhat careful; but I shall make amends for that, by defireing you to withdraw into a more private place; and as for the fhort time of our acquaintance, I question not, but we shall quickly set our Horses together, and I hope our present meeting may be advantagious to us both, especially, if it be as I yet expect it. What do you mean, said I? That is, replyed she, if you be with Child, and fuch a Gamester as I wish you. I was much amazed at this Womans confidence; but however, she having been so open with me, I resolved to be as free with her: hoping her words might prove true, and that some benefit might be made out of her acquaintance; and therefore advising her to leave that Room, for another more private, the foon obey'd me; and having entred, and caufing a good fire, and Wine to be brought, we fat down together, not without my receiving some falutations, and strict embraces from my Antient, but to me new acquaintance. After we had each of us washed away forrow with a Cup of the best Canary, the Old Woman being now more bold than before; again took me in her arms, & laid her hand hard upon my Belly; when it fo fortuned, that at that very instant the Child gave a gentle turn in my Belly; which she quickly felt; and then cryed out, Well, Daughter, you fee I was in the right; therefore fince I have discovered somewhat, I pray tell me the rest of your condition; and I question not but you will receive much profit by your discovery: I was resolved to be very free with her, and acquaint her with the chiefest of my Adventures; still concealing fo much thereof, as should, or might be convenient to be made known; whereupon I thus began.

Mother (fince you will have it fo) I shall make a free confession of my Crime; hoping you will be merciful in the pennance you shall impose; feeing, as you say, I am not the alone guilty party; and thereupon I recounted to her, how that I being born in such a Country, and desirous to see fashions, went up to London, and there happened into a Service; where my Masters Brother falling in love with me, after some Courtship (he promising me marriage) we came to enjoyment; that he, notwithstanding his promise married with another; who indeed exceeded me in

Fortune, as I her in beauty; but my fweet heart foon after marriage came to me, and repented of his bargain; but fince that was paft could not be remedied, I was forced to be contented; and indeed, I having a great love for him, permitted him ftill to lye with me, that in the end, I was with Child by him; and then we confulting what was most necessary to be done, it was at length concluded, that I should leave my fervice, and retire into the Country, till I were rid of my great Belly; and to that end and purpose, I was now come into the Country, expecting him in short time to follow me. Thus did I give her a short, though somewhat true, account of my Fortunes; and when I had done, she thus replyed.

Well, Daughter, fince your condition is as I judged it, and indeed hop'd it to be; I shall play the Chymist, and extract Golden Fortunes to you out of your own desperate misfortunes; for I doubt, as your Lover hath once been false to you, so he may prove the fecond time; and now he hath fent you a journey, he may leave you to flift for your felf; and to look for another Father for your Child. But, Daughter, (continued the) if you will be rul'd by me, you shall not only have a rich Father, but a great fortune for your Child: and perhaps, fo much ready money for your felf, as you will not only give me thanks, but reckon this our meeting to be the most fortunate Accident of your whole Life. I thank you very kindly, replyed I, for your fair offers, but I shall defire you to explain your felf further; and I suppose I shall put so much confidence in you, as to be rul'd by you; although I do not in the least doubt that I shall be put to those extremities you imagine. So much the better, replyed the; but however, that I may fit you for those purposes I have defigned, and partly propounded to you; I shall give you an account of some part of my Life and Adventures; and thereupon she thus Began.

CHAP. II.

The Old Woman relates to Mrs. Dorothy, where she was born, in an Ale house; how educated in all manner of debauchery; how she had a Bastard, which she murther'd, is after marriage gotten with Child by a Moor, and perswades her Husband it was his, notwithstanding, it being conceived so by the strength of imagination. Her Husband growing jealous of the Black Moor, sights him; and they kill one the other. A strange adventure between her Lover and a Frenchman, with a Wind mill.

was born (faid she) at Portsmouth; a Sea-Port-Town, very well known, not only to most English Men, but also to many Strangers. My Parents were of the ordinary ranck, keeping a fudling School, or House of good fellow-ship. I was educated, according to the Custom of the place, to learn to read, and Sew; in learning of which having fpent two or three years, at the Age of eleven I was taken home to fit in the Barr and keep the fcores; I was well pleafed to be at home, because there was great variety of Guefts; especially merry drunken Saylors: who, when they had liberty to come ashore, would lustily booz it; and fing, and dance, all weathers. And to that end, our House was still accommodated with a blind Harper, who pick'd up a merry living: I taking pleafure in Mufick, and my Father thinking it would advance his trading, bought for me a pair of Virginals; and hired a man to teach me: I giving my mind to it, foon learnt fome tunes, which I played to the merry Saylers, whilft they pull'd off their shoes, and dane't Luftick; and fometimes I gaining a Teafter, or Groat for my Musick, was fo encouraged, that I quickly took all the inftructions my Master was able to give me; I likewife learned fome fongs of him, and fome of the Saylers; fo that in little time I was well furnished with fat and lean Songs; fo we term'd the bawdy and others. Although I foon understood what was meant by bawdy Songs; yet I was yet to young to have experience of them: however, when my Auditors laugh'd, and fometimes hug'd and kifs'd me, I had fome kind of Notions that were very pleafing to me; and although my Mother fometimes told me of the hateful name of Whore, and how much it concerned me to keep my Maiden-head; yet I refolved that if it were long ere I were married, yet it should not be fo before I tryed what it was to lye with a Man: however I followed my Mothers directions, in frowning, and fcouling on those who forc'd a kiss from me. But, as I had defigned, fo it came to pass; for at the Age of fourteen years, a Sayler, who of all other fort of People, I liked beft, gained my good liking: he newly came home from a boon Vovage, and was full of half Crown pieces, and took up his quarters at our house; my Father seeing him so slush, was refolved to milk him; and therefore permitted him to keep me Company, though he faw he was very familiar in hugging and kiffing me; I likewife had a great mind to fome of his money, and therefore begg'd fome of him to buy Ginger-bread, Sugar, Plumbs, Figgs, Fruit, and fuch like liquorish things; he believing, that as I had a liquorifh tooth, fo I might have a liquorifh Tail, refused me no moneys I defired; but I being fomewhat modeft in the finallness of my demands, had but little that wayes by fair play; therefore I bethought me, how I might be Miftrefs of more; therefore was refolved, at the next opportunity, to pick his pocket, which I guess'd would be no difficult matter to do; in regard he was oftentimes much overtaken with the Creature; and therefore, to the end I might effect my defires, when we were met next together, I drank pretty finartly with him, and conveyed fome ftrong waters into each cup of his Beer; and fo in fhort time he being fomewhat tipfie, defired me to fing him a fong, which I performing, he was quickly, as I supposed fallen asleep; I fat in his lap, and as cunningly as I could, flipt my hand into his Pocket; where I gathered up three or four half Crowns; as fleepy as he was, he observed me, and while I was at my work, he was at his; and as flighly he conveyed one of his hands into another place, having not as yet been at that fport; I fqueek'd out, which made him rife, and me withdraw my hand, and both of us leave our Prizes; and I blufhing for anger, that I was fo doubly catch'd, would have left the Room; but he taking hold of me, defired me to be quiet, and told me, what was done on his part was but in jest, as he supposed what I did was; and that it was but quid for quo. I having by this time gained fome confidence, was, at his entreaty, content to ftay longer with him, and fung another fong; which when I had done, he gave me four half Crowns (a greater fum than I was ever till then Miftress of) and told me, fince he knew what I would have, he would give it me, as he hoped I would do the like. To which I replyed, I knew not what I might do in time, if he continued his kindness to me. Thus did I encourage him to be liberal to me, in hopes of his defired reward: and thus neither of us (knowing one anothers minds) was long backwards, without enjoying our defires; he giving me fome money and a Ring. I permitted him to enjoy me as fully as he could wish or defire; and many rancounters we had together, both at home and abroad, as time and place would permit: but as the longest day will have an end fo had his money; and then my Father perceiving that it was low ebb in his Pocket, began to be more wary and circumfpect of him, and to watch him, and flight him, left he should gain any thing upon me, and run into his fcore; and fo he might lofe as much in the shire, as he had got in the hundred; the Old Woman, my Mother, being fomewhat fuspicious of me, still watch'd us with much wariness; and he not having money to treat me abroad at other houses, as formerly, we were fain to have all our fports at home when we had conveniency; and there we were fo narrowly put to it, that we were oftentimes in danger to be catch'd.

When my fweet-heart could get any Moneys he would treat me abroad; and one day having been walking with me, he committed one of the greatest extravagancies I ever heard of he had drank very hard and was now almost fluster'd, when coming by the Wind mill which is near our Town, the wind blowing fomewhat moderately, there was a French man, who challenged fome English Saylers to shew some feats of activity; among other exploits, he took hold of one of the wings of the Wind-mill, and holding faft, was carried round therewith, lighting very orderly on the ground upon his feet. This was a wonderful, and we thought desperate attempt, and he much bragg'd of it daring any English man to do the like: my fweet-heart being with me, and defirous to gain my efteem, and being fomewhat pot shaken, makes no more ado, but likewife takes hold of one of the wings of the Windmil; which by reason the wind blew more freshly than it had done lately, caused the Mill to go more fwiftly then ordinary; and he not being able to hold fast, was thrown off: but though it was a pretty way off, yet to his good Fortune, he was not thrown to the ground (which would have broken his bones,) but into a pond of water; and there he being very skilful in fwimming, foon recovering himfelf, fwam to the shore; and not forgetting what he had done, cryed out, Now let any Mounfieur of ye all do the like. All there prefent did much applaud him; fome attributing that to his defign and skill, which indeed was by chance; and truly, it was a good chance for him, that he broke not his neck: but he then escaped any further danger: and some Merchants being there present, were so surprized with the manner of the action that they gave him ten shillings to drink; he being thus rewarded for his folly, thought it his best courfe to go home; where we being come, and my Father made acquainted with the matter, and that he had money in his Pocket made much of him, and perswaded him to go to bed; and my Mother procured him a Sack poffet, which we all eat of at his beds fide: but little did they think that this was a kind of a Bride-poffet: for, although we were not married that day, yet we lay together that night; for when they were in their bed, in went I to his; where he expected me, having before enjoyned me to make use of that opportunity, which I did, to both our good intents: for we enjoyed one another in full freedom of all dilights: this being the first and last time I ever lay with him; for not long after, his coyn being fpent, and a Voyage presented it felf, he Shipp'd himfelf, and away he went for the East Indies; we promissing a constant continuance of our affections. But he being gone, it was not long, ere I found a strange alteration in my body, being taken with pewkings, and vomitings, fuch as young Married folks are used to have; whereupon I concluded, that I should foon have a great belly, which so fell out; but before that, I had a Husband to Father it.

Our House being publique, we entertained all Comers: amongst the rest, there came a Sayler, who had had the Fortune to meet with a prize; and he for his own thare had two hundred pounds Sterling. This was fo tall a Fortune as was unufual to be the poffession of an ordinary Sayler; and he chancing in at our house, my l'ather was very desirous to rid him of his mony: he acquainted my Mother with his purpofe, and told her, that this Fellow would make a very good Fortune for me their Daughter; and they might by means of this live more plentifully then ever. The Fellow foon expressed a great deal of love for me, which my mother taking notice of, told me of her own and my Fathers intentions, and bid me prepare to entertain his love, for they defigned him for my Husband; the advited me to be free and courteous to him, but by no means to let him proceed further then the ordinary civility. I promifed her all obedience, and the was very diligent and watchful over me. My fweet heart was very fweet upon me, and would fain have been dealing with me, as Merchandize, bidding very fair for me, but I refolved to have all or none; would not let him have a bit, but what was lawful: he being thus floot, was the more earnest; and at length, ratherthan lofe me, agreed to have me at my own terms which was marriage; which at length was fully agreed upon. But my qualmes encreating as did my belly, my Mother suspected somewhat was the matter. and thereforetook me strictly to task; and so wrought with me; that I confessed I had been sporting with my former fweet-heart; this news much startled her; but fhe who had passed many such brunts, soon found out a remedy; and told me that if I would be wholly ruled by her, she would still warrant the business should go on prosperously enough; for, faid she, I will direct you to carry your felf, fo as the lofs of your Maidenhead shall not be discovered; and as for your great Belly, we will when you are marryed, fend your husband to Sea before your time of delivery: and in the mean time, we will manage all matter cunningly e-My Mother having thus encouraged me, I prepared for the wedding day, which was foon after appointed; which being come, and night also, we wentto bed; and there my Bride-groom going about to enjoy me, I counterfeited all kinds of fimplicity: I cryed, fob'd, and fcreeked out; and he had much ado, with puffing and blowing, and fweating, to poffefs himself of me. I had all the marks and symptoms of untouch'd Virginity; and the more to beguile him, notwithstanding all his fair words, and endeavours, I made fo great a noise as raised my Mother; who coming into our chamber, found me in fwound; from which she foon brought me, by rubbing me with Vinegar, and other Remedies; and she perswaded me to be patient, and defired him to deal kindly with me, ufing this Proverb; Gently, John, the Girls Young, She left us, and then with fomewhat more Patience I permitted him to take his pleafure with me.

Thus was I marryed, and came off with all Credit imaginable; but afterwards it did not proceed as we expected; for my Husband being very fond of my company, would not by any means be perfwaded to leave me for the Sea; but intended, now he had gained money enough, to live on fhore. This resolution of his was very unpleasing; but I was forced to be contended, and to provide against the time of my delivery of my great Belly, which now came on a pace, and indeed was fomewhat fooner than I expected; for I was taken one day with a fuddain pain, which much furprized my Mother; for my Husband was in the House, and hearing my cryes, would needs force his way into my Chamber; where I was accompanyed by my Mother, who was instructing me what to do; on his approach to the Bed, my pains encreafed, and a Child was born into the World; but, that he might not discover the fallacy, by the crying of the Child, I fmothered it; and lying still for some space, my Mother perfwaded him to depart; he being gone, my Mother fell to work; and removed the Child. playing the Midwife in the best manner she could; and all being buried, and I put into order, she told her Son in law, that these were extream fits of the Chollick, and would now they had begun, continue for fome dayes; wherefore the defired him to take another Lodging, and let her lye with me: to this he hardly confented; but at length, at both our importunities. he was content, and in ten dayes time, I still every day counterfeited fits of groaning, but he feeing I fenfibly amended, would no longer forbear lying with me.

Thus did I escape this misfortune, and came off with flying Colours, without the least suspicion; so that I was encouraged to proceed in surther Roguries; which was the ruine of my Husband, and in which I had like to have been involved. I told you our house was for all Guests; and now by the addition of my Husbandsmoney, which was employed in my Fathers Trade, to encrease his stock, our house the best surnished, was the best customed house in the Town; amongst the rest, there came a Person of Honour, who had been a Traveller, and among his Attendants a Negro, or Black-man, which he had brought from Guiana. This Black-more was reported by his Master and others, to be the Son of a Prince in his own Country; I look'd on him with an affectionate and fmiling countenance; which he perceiving, and also that I was handfome, much defired my company; and being Master of money enough to spend on me, he had many opportunities of courting me; at the first, I examining what I was about to do drew back, thinkingit a very strangething to be kiss'd by a Black-more. but use brought it into Custom; and I endured not only that, but also methought I had a minde to taste of his flesh, perswading my felf, that there would be more than ordinary fatisfaction in that enjoyment: and he finding me coming, so profecuted his fuit, that it was not long ere I enjoyed him: I must confess much to my content, for nothing but his sparkling eves was to be feen in the dark, which indeed were as fhining, as two ftars in a clear night; and he was as much delighted with me: fo that we promifed to take all opportunities for enjoyment. The Lords business kept him there follong, that we had fo much fport in jest, as turned to earnest; for I found my felf to be with child, and I did absolutely believe that my Blackfriend was the Father of it: this confideration put me into a deep melancholly; for we carried our business not so privately, but that we were taken notice of, and fuspected by my Mother; but much more by my Husband, whose extreme love to me was converted into as extreme a jealousie; and he looked on my Black-friend with a great deal of horror.

I finding my felf with Childe, and doubting it was by him, a fancy possessed me, that I should bring forth a Black-More like the Father: this, I say put me to a very great non-plus; and I endeavoured by all means toblind my Husband, and takeall fuspition from him: I told him, I believed I was with Child, this pleafed him; but I also added, I doubted, I should not render him compleatly fatisfied: for that I had a very great fancy that the Child would be black, and I could give no reason, but that the fight of my Lords Black-More was deeply imprinted in my fancy: I told him, I had read the ftory of a Black Queen and King, who had a Child that was white; and being fo born, was thrust out of the King his Fathers Dominions, for no other cause but because he was white; and the Oueen his Mother hardly escaped the fury of her Husband, who fhrewdly suspected her guilty of Adultry with some white-man, because the Child was so. This said I, was the Crime laid to her charge; and it feemed fo reafonable to him and all his Nobility; that notwithftanding the Queen was alwayes effected to be a vertuous woman, yet the hardly escaped with her life. length, a wife man of that Kingdome coming to the Court, and hearing of the matter, and that the Oueen was banished as well as her Son; he, faid I, walking about the Court, and coming into the Kings Bed-chamber, there faw the Picture of a fair white-woman. which had, as great rariety, been prefented to the King he then remembring the unfortunate case of the Queen, did really believe that the fight of that white Picture had occasioned the Oueen to conceive and bring forth a white Child. Being thus convinced, and perfwaded in his own opinion, he was not long before he perswaded the King to the same; and the Oucen having been alwayes of an unblemisht reputation, it was concluded by the King, and all the Nobility, that the Queen was innocent: and thereupon the banishment was repealed, and both received home with great joy, flate, and honour; and this Son, after his Fathers deceafe, was crowned, and reigned King of the Place. Now fweet-heart, faid I, this being fo, and fancy having fo ftrong an operation in the womb by the only fite of a Picture, I cannot but imagine that the real prefence of one may work much more and greater effects, especially fince I find a very great inclination not only to love, but long for black things; black cherries, I affect extreamly, as also damsons, sloes, & black-bullies; I chiefly feed on black puddings; and it is not very long, faid I, fince I longed for a black hat, and did eat it up every bit: and now I have lately had a great desire to a dish of butter'd charcoal.

This discourse wrought variously with my Husband, who, although he did fomewhat fufpect me, yet would he take no great notice at prefent, but told me, that furely this was but fancy, and would in the end amount to nothing: I was content with his anfwer; but knowing his mind flood thereto bent, I first propounded, that the Black-more should depart our house, or else that I might remove from home to some other place, to fee, if by his abfence the fancy would leave me: to this he willingly agreed; and in regard to move for the Black-more's departure until his Lord went also, would not only raise suspicious Discourses, but turn to our disadvantage, by reason they were good Guests; we therefore resolved that I should remove four or five miles from home: the which I did the next day; but my departure was not fo fecret, but that I gave notice thereof to my beloved Black-more, who promifed not to be long before he took the opportunity of giving me a vifit; the which he did unfeen of any, I letting him in at a back Garden door; and thither he ufually came to me once in two or three days: we fometimes fpent fome hours together in a Banqueting-house in the Garden; and at last grew so bold, as to spend whole nights in bed together; fo that my Husband, who forely fufpected me, was refolved to watch my waters; and one Evening miffing the Black-more, who was then come to me, he at midnight departed; and coming to the back door whereat the Black-more entred, he finding it open, entered, faw the Candle in my Chamber, and I believe could hear our voyces, but knew not how to enter without great noise; wherefore, now resolving in his mind what to do, he waited till the morning, walking about the Garden; but in regard the Blackmore had fome affairs of his Lords that morning to dispatch, he arose early, and left me: I shut fast the door, and left him; no fooner was he down, but my angry Husband with a drawn fword meets him; he feeing and knowing him, gueffed his purpofe, likewife quickly draws; and they running upon one anothers fwords, foon bereft each other of life.

CHAP. III.

The Old Woman relates, that her Husband and Blackfriend having killed one another, she removes her lodging, and is brought to bed of a young Black-more, which she likewise murthereth; and then again removing her quarters, and passing for a maid, is married to a young Inn-keeper; who, instead of her, had a maid servant for his Bed fellow; who being both sleepy, she sets fire of the House; and then pretending to fetch water at the Well, tumbles her in, where she is drowned.

Thus, faid Mrs. Dorothy, did the old Hagg give me an account of her mischievous beginning; and indeed, in the profecution of her story, she acquainted me with fo many horrible actions, that I was agast; and wondered that the Earth did not open to fwallow up a wretch fo monstrously wicked; but I think, said the, by what I have faid, I have told you enough to know her, and therefore shall pass over the rest of her actions in filence: nay, faid I, Mrs. Dorothy, fince you have begun to give us fo fair an account of the foul actions of this your wicked acquaintance, I shall defire you to take the pains to proceed therein. Truly, faid Mrs. Mary, although I have known many wretched People in my dayes, yet I never heard of the like; and I suppose by what you have already recounted, that all you have further to fay will be both remarkable, admirable, and pleafant (if we may account that pleafant which is fo mischievously, and wickedly witty;) and therefore I, as well as our friend here, defire you to continue your relation; and if you will take the pains, we will have the patience to hear you to the least particular. Mrs. Dorothy being thus requested by us both, replyed, that she should be content to grant our defires, but then we must have a great deal of patience, and pardonthose impertinent ignorances that she should be forced to recount, in relating so many notable and various adventurous actions of another: We told her, we should willingly attend, and excuse her in all; and thereupon she thus continued.

Although (faid this old Trot) my Husband, and my black friend had quickly dispatch't their business, by thus dispatching one another, yet they were neither fo fudden nor fo filent, but I both heard and faw them tilt at one another with their fwords, which were bathed in each others heart blood; and fo they fell, grinning at each other with horrible Countenances and they lay fo close together, that they could catch hold of one another, and fight with their hands, their fwords being fleathed in one anothers bodies; but this contest could not, neither did it last long, their hearts being fuffocated with Blood, and fo in short time they both expired; which I discovered by the noise of hollow groans: and thus continued she, was I deprived of a Friend, and a Husband. I was ftartled at the prefent, but confidering what was to be done, went to bed, and lay there till fome of the house came and bounc'd at my Chamber door; I fuffered them to continue knocking for fome time, as if I had been afleep; but they growing more furious by reafon of my filence, were ready to break open the door, when I jumped out of my bed, and in my fmock opening the door, asked them what was the cause of their violent knocking; they replyed, they were glad to fee me alive, which they much doubted, by reason of my filence, and having feen fuch a doleful fight as was then in the Garden: I feeming ignorant of all, defired them to explain themselves, and acquaint me with their meaning; they were not long then ere they had told me, that my Husband and the Black-more who quartered at my Fathers, were both dead in the Garden: I was amazed, ran then to the window, and there beheld what I too well knew already; and then cryedout, and in lamentable and furious manner threw my felf on the floor, tearing my hair, and making great lamentation; by this time the Constable and other Neighbors were come, but could not get any thing out of me to discover any knowledge of the fact. I feemed a ftranger to all; and fo the Bodies being removed, word was fent to my Father and Mother, who quickly came thither; but finding me, as the reft, to pretend ignorance, nothing could be done; but the People conjectured variously, and though they could not accufe me as the murtherer, yet I was shrewdly suspected to be the cause; they judging the truth as it was: but however, I was without the compass of the law, and therefore escaped all trouble.

Their Bodies were foon after buried, and I thought it abfolutely neceffary to abfcond my felf, left (the time of child bearing being near approaching, I might be further difcovered by the Complexion of the child, which I did verily believe would be black; and therefore I left my Fathers house, and went to an obscure Village about ten miles off; I took up my lodging with an old Woman of my Mothers acquaintance, pretending a great melancholly fince the death of my Husband, and therefore avoided all Company: Ihad all along attempted to destroy the Child in my Womb, and tothat end I had taken Savine, and many other drugs and potions, and using to jump, and leap, and wraftle, to cause my self to miscarry, but all in vain; fo that in fine, I was forced to use the same remedy I had done, and fmother the Child fo foon as it was born; I had all possible conveniences to do it, whilft the Midwife, who lived at fome diftance, was not much looked after, although it was fomewhat black, which was now taken to be fo, only by reafon of its ftrugling for passage; and wanting a Mid-wife, I caused it to be quickly nail'd up in a box, and so with little trouble passed over the difficulty of this affair: my Mother foon came to me, and accommodated me, with every thing fit for my condition, fo that it was not long ere I perfectly recovered; and I having no mind to return to my Fathers nor to flav in that place. caused my Mother to provide me with a gentile habit; and money in my pocket, and being thus fitted, went twenty miles further, to the house of another of my Mothers acquaintance; and having been foun fortunate with a Husband, was refolved not to own that ever I had been married, but to pass for a maid; which I might well enough do, not being yet above eighteen years of age. My beauty then was fo charming, that I quickly gained many adorers; and it being given out that I was a Virgin, and of a good fortune, had many Sutors in earnest, that woed me in the honest terms of marriage. Having the choice of feveral, I was the more cov; but in the end, there was one, who was an Inn-keeper, whose Father being lately dead, and left a handsome competency, him I accepted of, but with great jealousie and suspition of my self; lest he was a cunning youngfter, should discover the want of my Virginity. I was fenfible it would be no difficult matter for him to finde me out, but which (faid she) I did in this manner.

There was a Servant-Maid in the House, whom I ufually had for my Bed-fellow, and with her I wasvery free in all my discourse, acquainting her with all pasfages between me and my Sweethearts; and many pleafing difcourfes we had upon those occasions, and commonly we fpent fome hours every night when we were in Bed, in these Conserences: Iasking her which of my Sweet-hearts was the best, and likliest to prove a good Husband; fhe and I both jumped in one mind, and she feemed to rejoyce at the good Fortune I was likely to enjoy, in having fohandsome, and accomplish'd a Perfon, as he was with whom I was to be Married; faying, that of all men breathing, she never faw one whom, she thought, fhe could love better; and adding, that fhe would give all the money in her Pocket to have my place on the Wedding Night. Well, thought I, are you there? I'le be with you anon. Truly faid she, I am a perfect Maid, not having yet had to do with any Man; and for deed, nay, for thought and word, untill this time, was a pure Virgin; but methinks, fince I faw your Sweetheart, I have fuch pleasing imaginations, that I could willingly experiment the effects; but, continued she, I hope you will take all this in good part, and not be jealous of me, for I shall not in the least injure you, no, though your Sweet-heart should defire it; befides, my Quality and condition is fo much beneath yours, that it would be but a folly to expect it: but shall wish you all happiness with your beloved Bridegroom. She having opened her mind thus freely to me, it was the thing I only aimed at, and above all things wish'd for; and therefore, that I might now ftricke while the Iron was hot, I thus replyed; come, come, do not counterfeit more Modesty than needs, but tell metruely, and sincerely, if I can find a way to compass your desires; and be therewith content, and willing, will you obey me in what I shall desire of you? This is a strange proposition, said she, and I believe far from your heart to do, and only to try me farther; but I pray let us talk no more of this matter.

I quickly answered, that I was now in earnest, and would (if the would fwear to me to be fecret) difcover a fecret that was of the highest importance, and that then all things would be as the had withed; the wondring what I meant, and being defirous (as all women are inquisitive after fecrets) to discover mine. foon made many protestations and vows, to be fecret in what ever I should impart to her; and thereupon I toldher, that indeed about twelve moneths fince, being in my fathers house, a Gentleman of quality lodging there, and having divers times courted me; and I alwayes refusing to hear him; and being very obstinate, notwithstanding all his endeavours by Prefents, and otherwife; he, I faid being wholy impatient, and refolved to venture all for my enjoyment, took his opportunity, and came to bed to me; I feeling him near me, cry'dout but in vain, for my Lodging was at too great a distance from any bodyes hearing; and fo in the end, notwithstanding my striving, and strugling, he had his will of me; and indeed, to tell you the truth, the danger of the brunt being over, and I well knowing that what was past could not be recalled, was, in the end, willing a fecond, or third time, to permit him the fame enjoyment; and fo he went away in the Morning well fatisfied, and I better pleas'd than when he came to me. I was refolved to keep this from the knowledge of my Parents, and did fo, though he offered me Marriage, which would have been advantageous enough for me, he being, as I faid, a Person of Quality; but however, he continued his practice with me all the time of his ftay at my Fathers, which was two Moneths; and then he departing, promised a sudden return, and that he would then discover himself to my Father, and request me in Marriage; I trufted to his fair words, and permitted his departure; buthehad not been long absentere I perceived my felf to be with Child: I kept this from the knowledge of all, fo long as I could; but in the end, my Mother suspecting me, charged me so roundly, that I confessed the Fact; she thereupon took the best remedy she could, and unknown to my Father, fent me away to a Friend of hers, where I lay in of a Child, which foon after dying, and I recovered, I again removed hither, where what hath befaln me you already know as well as I; and now, my dear Friend, faid I, the case being thus, you may do me a great kindness, and please your self, as you say, by taking my place on the Wedding-night; and he lying with you in my stead may be deceived, and take me for a pure Virgin; whereas otherwife I am in much doubt to be discovered, in regard, that not only I have lost my Maidenhead, but have also lately had a Child.

My Bed-fellow gave diligent attendance to what I hadrelated, and after I had fatisfied her how she should behave her self in every respect, she consented to take my turn. My business being in this forwardness, I quickly consented to clap up the bargain with my Sweet-heart; and the Wedding-day being come, we were accordingly Married; and at Bed time I went to Bed with my Bride-groom, but seigning Modesty, commanded all to depart the Room; which they did, leaving one Candle burning; I seeing the Company gone, leap'd out of the Bed to put the Candle out; which I did, and then, according to appointment, the Maid, who was ready in her fmock behind the Hangings, quickly gotinto the Bed, and enjoyed my place; I staid in the Chamber, and could well enough difcoverall paffages between them, and how she made some faint resistance; but not long it was ere they fell a fleep, and flept fo long, that I was at a very great fland what to do, left day-light should come ere she should awake, and then be feen by my Husband, and I difgraced and loft for ever; I ruminated in my mind many wayes; at laft I was refolved to proceed to violence, and hazard all, rather than lose my credit; and therefore seeing they still flept on, I went out of the Chamber into the next; where with the help of a Tinder-box, I struck a light; and getting a Torch, and lighting it, fet fire on fome part of the house, which foon encreased to a greatflame; I then made no great difficulty to make a noife, and cry out fire, fire; this was foon feen, fmelt, and heard by my droufie bedfellows, who both arofe: and I being there, caught hold of him, as if I had lain with him; and his bedfellow being now a little come to her felf, and feeing me, began to confider what fhe was to do; and ran where her cloaths were, put them on, and then came to help me to mine.

My Husband, and all the reft of the Family being thus raifed, ran about for water to quench the fire; I being left alone with my Husbands Bed-fellow, could have found in my heart to have killed her with a Sword there in the Chamber; because she had been the occasion of all this mischief; and the thoughts of that, and remembring what hurt she might do me hereafter, in discovering my secrets or, at least, in being my Co-rival; these Considerations made me resolve to dispatch her into the other world; and therefore desiring her to go down with me into the Yard to setch water at the Well, she did so; where I spying my opportunity, in the absence of the rest of the Family, as she was stooping to draw Water, I turned her head forwards into the Well; where, before any came to help her, she was dead. I pretended to bewail her misfortunes; but the fire, by the assistance of some Neighbours, being now quench'd, we all retired into that part of the House that was unburn'd; where every one lamented, not only the missortune of the fire, but that of the Maids death; in which I alone was principally concerned.

CHAP. IV.

Shebeing at home with her Husband, is Courted by Gallants; one of which Cuckolds him; She is out witted by her Gallant, and cheated of a Gown, and three Rings; she is Courted by another Gallant, and they fludy a Revenge on the first; which she executes, by appointing the first to come to Bed to her; where her Husband, by her appointment, was in her stead; who taking him in the manner, soundly whips him; in the mean time she is in Bed with her new Gallant.

THE next day after our unfortunate Weddingnight, all Perfons concerned began to reckon up their loffes; in which, neither I, nor my Husband fuffered but little; for he had nothing there but the Clothesonhis back, and I only had mine, and a Trunk of Clothes, and Linnen, which were fafe. Our Landlord loft fome of his Goods, and an hundred pounds would not repair the damage the House had sustained by the fire; he therefore complained much of his losses: but his lamentations were not equal to those of an Old Woman, who lived in the Town, and was the Mother of the Unfortunate Maid, whom I had so treacherously, and ungratefully murthered: I was almost as joyful as she was fad, that I was rid of so dangerous a Corrival, whom I had entrusted with my greatest secrets.

The diforders of this House caused us to quit it fooner than we intended; for that very day we removed to my Husbands Habitation, which was not above four Miles diftant, and there we Lodged, where that night I received those imbraces from my Husband which were very pleafing to me, and then all things were as well fixed as I could defire; only my Mothers coming was every day expected, I having given her notice of my Transactions by Letters: She came in few dayes, and that not empty-handed; for the brought an hundred pounds in ready money with her: this, fhe told her new fon-in-law, was but part of a greater Sum, my Father and the intended for my Portion; although my Husband expected five hundred pounds with me (I having given out that I should have fo much) yet he was content with this for the prefent; and this money was part of what was left me of my first Husbands. During the ftay of my Mother, we kept open House; and giving upour selves to all manner of mirth, I found my Husband to be but an easie Coxcomb, and one whom I thought I should out-wit, andover-rule; he was much inclined to gameing; and, as the fortune of the Dice went, he formetimes won, and loft again as often; at which he would be fomewhat waspish and griping: and what he lost by gameing, he would get up again out of large Reckoning, and tricks he would put upon his Guests, who now were more in number than formerly; for it being given out, that he was Married, and that to one that was handfom, all the Countrey came in upon us; especially all the roaring Lads, who fpent highest, came all to see, and prefent their fervice to their Land-lady; and as a Citizens shop is never fo well furnished, as when a handsome Wife is placed in a varnisht feat; even so is an Innkeepers Barr; and doth draw in Customers, all in hopes to have a lick at her honey pot; and although a Woman be never fochaste, and the Guests finde it so, yet if she be but handsome, her company is still desired; but you know my temper fo well, that you may guess I should not hold out a seven years siege, if I were but once bravely affaulted; but withall, I refolved to be as cunning as all my Observations had taught me, and not be like a Glove for every ones drawing on. If I had any Servants, I refolved they should be of the best; and those I counted so, who wore most money in their Pockets, I had my choice of feveral of that kind; and though I still counterfeited a great Modesty yet I was treated, and regalia'd both at home and abroad; there was no fport, or divertifements, but I made one of the Company; no fair near our Town but I visited, being conducted thither by one Gallant or other: where I had feveral Fairing prefented me. I had my Husbands confent to all my actions, for I still acquainted him with all; and when I was carried to any place, I told him every particular, and caused him to meet me at the place and time appointed; without which I pretended a mighty unwillingness; and this I did, that he might put the greater confidence in me.

This trade I did drive for a long time, without joyning iffue with any of my Gallants, and they gained no more upon me than a kifs, or a languishing look, which I fometimes cast upon them to cause them to believe that in time they might arrive to the height of their defires; and for these my kind looks I was as kindly rewarded; they prefenting me with Gloves Scarffs, Hoods, Rings and Cabinets, and fuch like Womanish toyes, and all in hopes that they might toy with me, as in fine they did: I had feveral of thefe Gamesters, but one above all the rest was most in my favour, he having been themost prodigal in expences upon me; I gave him full freedome with me, and I cornuted this as well as I had done my other Husband; he spent much of his time in gaming, and was very earnest at it with his Guests: and while he was at his game, I and my Gallant were at ours. My friend for his greater pretence of freedom in our house, would humour my Husband, and Game with him, and lofe his money; for indeed my Husband was at that sport the better Gamester, although my friend pleased me better at the other; by these extravagancies of his, and his loffes at Gameing, he in time came to a low ebb of money in his pocket, and was necessitated to withdraw, and leffen his expences; fo that he was not fowelcome to me or my Husband as he had been: for I was of the Old Womans Opinion, No longer Pipe, no longer Dance: as he avoided expences I shunn'd his Company; and having Friends enough who defired to be my Customers, I endeavoured to be rid of him. He flill continued his wonted freedome, and defiring my Company abroad; and fo confident he was grown, that he would ask my husbands leave, who had not yet refused him; and therefore a Comedy being to be acted at a Town not far off, he gained my company to go with him; I had other company that I liked better than his, but I could not shift him off, although I very much endeavoured it.

The Play being done, he defired to treat me privately, which I accepted of, having a defign to manage that was newly come in my head, and which was this: I had feen a Gentlewoman at the Play, who had a new filk Gown, of a pretty colour and fashion, I was refolved to beg fuch another of him, and in cafe of refusal, to break with him totally: I therefore took my opportunity, and when he defired his wonted freedom with me, I told him he was mistaken, and I absolutely refused, and forbid him turning up any more Coats then he was willing to pay for: he asked what I meant by my discourse and resusal: I told him unlefs he would give mefuch a new Gown as I prefcribed to him, he should have no more to do with me: my Gentleman was as blank as a Bell founder, and his courage was formewhat cooled at my demands; fo that he foon arofe, and walked up and down in a mufing posture; at length he spake, and made some excuses and paufes: but I being refolved on the question, told him, that he had forborn his Penfion a great while, and therefore I was refolved he should be the more liberal, and that I would to try his love by performing that request; if he would not grant my defires, I would also refuse him his; but if he would give me such a Gown, he fhould ftill oblidge me, and have the first taking of it up. Come, come, faid he, you and I will not fall out for fuch a matter as that, and you shall have it, or any thing elfe that is in my power, or indeed that you can wish for; and within these three dayes I will fend it you, on condition that I may have a full nights lodging with you, well, replyed I, be you fo good as your word, and I will order the matter fo, as you shall have your defire: and thus we having clapt up a bargain, concluded the discourse with two or three kiffes; and so after a confiderable repast, we returned home, and there we parted; he to contrive how to be so good as his word, and I to order my Husbands absence, that we might lye together, as I had promifed.

My Gallant examining the matter, found that at present the strength of his Pocket would not be sufficient to accomplish his defire, and therefore he fupplyed that defect by the strength of wit; he visited the Gentlewoman who was owner of the Gown, and being of her acquaintance, he requested her to let him have her Gown to shew a Taylor to make such another by for a Sifter of his; his defires being modest were the fooner granted; and a Taylor of his acquaintance received it of her, and immediately at his commands broughtitto me, I accepted it with a fmileing countenance, and giving him a fmall piece of Monev for his pains, difmifs'd him; when foon after my friend likewife followed; and my Husband being abfent, we concluded that night to devote our felves holy to Venus; and he being us'd to lye at our house, it was no great difficulty for him to quit his bed and come to mine, where we spent all that night in all those amorous enjoyments that we could devise: but he thinking he had paid dear for his nights pleafure, was refolved to have fomething more into the bargain; and that he might engage me another time, if I fell out with him, as he forefaw I would; wherefore he taking his opportunity when I was afleep, flipt no lefs then three of my Rings off from my fingers, and put them on his; and early in the morning he left me and my Bed, and went into his own; and having before contrived now to play his Cards, he went to the

Taylor, and advited him to come to me, and tell me he had forgot to finish somewhat that was very neceffary, and had been omitted to be done in the Gown, and therefore he was come to fetch it, that it might bemended, and he might have no difgrace by his work; I being without all fuspition, and feeing indeed there were fome defects, which he shewed me, delivered it to him, defireing him to make hafte with it, because I intended to have it home before my Husbands return, and then to tell him that my Father had fent it me; but I reckond before my Hoft; for although I waited two or three dayes, and fent to the Taylor, and asked my falfe friend, yet I could have none, but idle excuses and flashes; so that in conclusion I found my self cheated; for as I understood afterwards, the Gown was prefently fent home to the right owner; whom I faw wear it the next funday; and then knew it, by fome particular marks to be the fame. This paffage vexed me to the heart; but I was three times more angry when I miffed my Rings, and upon examination found that he had beguil'd me of them; and indeed for further confirmation, I faw them upon his fingers; this (faid fhe) extreemly perplexed and inraged me; fo that then I converted all my love into (its contrary) hatred, and studyed nothing fo much, as how to compass revenge. He finding that I was angred, refrained my Company at prefent, and that gave opportunity to another, who had long time courted me at a diffance, to lay a closer fiege to me; and lie fo far prevailed with me, what with gifts, treats and prefents, that I promised him that in short time he should reap the fruits of his defired Harvest; but I was resolved to make him inftrumental in my revenge upon my abufier; and to that end I thus broke the matter to him

Sir, your friendship and love I very much esteem; and believing you to be fincere, and one in whose breast I may repose trust and confidence; I shall discover fomewhat to you, that may for the future be of good confequence to us both; and it is this: I believe you have not been fo dim fighted, but you have observed more than common familiarity between me and Mr. fuch a one, naming my abufive Lover; fome prefents he hathgiven me, for which he expected more freedome with me than I was willing to impart; but I ftill kept him at a diftance, although he preffed hard upon me to enjoyment; which I not thinking fit at prefent to permit, he began to clamour, at length through his importunities, I confented he should lye with me at fuch a time, on condition he gave me fuch a filk Gown as I named; to this he agreed, and fent in the Gown accordingly: now it fo fell out, that I could not perform what he expected, and therefore delay'd him for a few dayes longer, till my Husband should be abfent, promifing then to keep touch with him; but whether he not believing me, or elfe the necessity of returning the Gown, which he had but borrowed, as I fince found; one or both these reasons induced him to be falfe to me, and by a while he got the Gown out of my hands; and he was not content with doing that only, but he also intending to abuse me further, when we were toying together, cheated me of three of my rings; which he as a Trophy of his Victory, and my weakness and thame, still wears on his fingers; and I fear he is fo prodigal and lavith of his tongue, as to bray to his acquaintance, that he had those as my gifts for unhandfome fervice done me.

Thus did I difguife the truth of my dealings with my abufive Lover, and having given my new one this account, defiring his affiflance in a revenge: to this he quickly answered, that as for the Gown I had been fo out-witted in, he would make up that lofs, by giving me another; and fo he would also fortherings, if I pleafed; or elfe compel my abusive lover to deliver them; and in all things elfe he would vindicate my credit. I replyed to him, that I would not have any compulsion, for that would make too much noise; but rather have his affiftance in my revenge, which I had thus contrived.

I would have him poffefs my Husband with jealousie against my abusive Lover, and leave the rest to my ordring, which I managed thus: I gave my abusive Friend more freedom, & shewed a kinder Countenance than I had done of late, & that only to draw him on, which I did with much eafe, for he had a great defire to be friends with me, and upon our first convenient parley, he confessed himself guilty, & made some trivial excufes, which I admitted of, as I did his love, in hopes to gain my rings, and a revenge; as for the rings, he prefently returned me one, and promifed the other two the third night following, when I agreed to lye with him, promifing to to order the matter, that my Husband should be then out of the house; we after this parley parted, and my new friend had fo dealt with my Husband, in discovering my abusive Friends freeness and privacy with me, that he now became abfolutely jealous, and intended to make me fentible of his anger; but I knowing where the shooewrung him. was before hand, and the next night told him, that if he did not take fome speedy course, I was in danger, and he too, to be abused by my abusive Lover; for faid I, he hath gotten two of my rings, and fliews them abroad, reporting he had them of me, as tokens of my difhonour; and to me hewill not deliver them, unlefs I will promife him a nights lodging: now faid I, if you have a mind to fave my honour, your own, and revenge us both on him, I will thus do; I will feemingly confent that he shall come to bed to me to morrow night, and to that end, I will have you pretend to go out of Town; but instead of your going, I will go to such a friends house, and there I'le stay; you shall lye in my Bed, and at the hour I will appoint him he will come to bed to you, when you and your friends, and fervants, I hope taking him in the manner, will so handle him, as he shall have little cause to boast of his nights lodging; and you and I shall be sufficiently revenged on him for thus attempting my Chaftity.

To all this discourse my Husband gave very good attention; and it corresponding with what he sufpected, he nowwholly quitted any suspitious thoughts of me, and agreed to execute all I had propounded; so that when the time came, my Husband pretended to lye out, took his leave of me, and my abusive Friend, who was glad of his abfence: I made hafte with him to bed, telling him about ten a Clock he might come fafely into my Chamber, and bed which he knew well enough, not to miftake the way. I then left him, and taking horse, went to my new friend, who expected me at our appointed Rendevouz, where he prefented me with the defired Gown, and I according to my promife, gave him a nights lodging with me, which was much more pleafant to us both, than was that of my abusive Friend; who at the hour appointed, went to my Chamber, and into the Bed where my husband was expecting him; he believing it was 1, began his embraces, and other actions, declaring his intent; with that my husband leap'd out of the Bed, and four good Old Women of my Friends, who were hid under the bed, discovered themselves, and having a dark

Lanthorn, lighted the Room, and fell to work: first, they tyed his hands and feet to the posts of the Beds Head and feet; and then each being provided with a good handful of Birch laid on lustily, till he roar'd sufficiently; my Husband making offer to geld him: but when it came to that point, he begg'd so heartily, that my Husband consented to his desire, only he paid the two rings he had of mine, as ransome for his Jewels.

CHAP. V.

Her abused and whipt Lover vows revenge, which is done in part; afterwards he is kill'd, yet kills his Corrival: the manner how, with other things very remarkable.

N Ever did the Canicular dayes infufe into Dogs a greater madness and fury, than did this whipping in Loves School inrage the minde of our sufficiently jerkt Amorist; which for the present (whilst under his Chirurgions hands) he durst not express; for all that he could do, was to supplicate them not to deprive him of what would make him stand as a Neuter between the Sexes of humane Generation; which they granted him.

With much hazard, and greater fear, escaping their hands, only in his shirt, without shooe or stocking, he got out into the streets; and being overjoy'd that he was secure, but had the black mantle of night to conceal his shame, and convey him home, without the knowledge of the Town inhabitants, ran through the streets with all speed imaginable; but, by the way, meeting with a sharp stone, it so hurt his foot, that he was compell'd to flacken his pace, and lamely limp to his lodging. The Clock had then struck twelve (an hour wherein supposed Bugg-bears walk, to frighten Children) as he could fee just before him two women, whom a third had raifed from their warm beds by her inceffant cries, proceeding from the intollerable pains fhethen indured, being ready to be delivered, to haften to call up a fourth, viz. a Midwife. Hafte on both fides had made them fo carelefly heedlefs in their way, that they were within a spit and a stride of each other, before they could difcern one the other. My cheating, and cheated Leacher perceived the women first, which puthim to a stand, what he were best to do, either togo forward, or backward; they, on the other fide, feeing a thing all in white fland opposit in their way, judged it to be the troubled spirit of the lately diseased Husband of this woman they were going to fetch the Midwife for. He, on the other hand, refolved to go forward; and they feeing him approach them (skreeking out) ran back as fast as they could; who being stopt by the watch, and demanded why they made that hideous outcry, made answer, they had met the Devil, or some thing like him. Condemning the womens idle and causless fears (as they judged) they advanced forwards, armed with Bills, Halberts, but principally with an unparallell'd refolution. My Gallant had flept into a by-corner, when the woman cried out to fecure himself from what might ensue that unexpected allarum, fully refolved to run home to his lodging directly, with what speed he might; he started out just as the Watch were advanc'd within half Piftol-fhot of him; the fudden furprize confirmed them in the womens report, fo that, without confideration there was not one of these desperate Kill-Devils to be seen, but such as with a too precipitate haste, lay tumbling in the Kennel, one over the other. This accident gave newwings to my Lovers seet, which were so benumm'd with cold, that he very much stood in need of such Icarian practices, Dædalian inventions.

In conclusion, with much knocking, he made a shift to get in. His Landlady (who was a Widow) seeing him in this condition, charg'd him home, asking, Where he had been, how he came thus to lose his skin? Whether he had been robb'd? Though wanting Garments, yet he would not be without a Cloak to hide this Venereal enterprize of his, and therefore replied, That falling into ill company, it was his ill hap to fall into that damn'd itch, that tickling humour of playing; that having won something, and like to win more, they would not let him play longer, butseizing him, stript him, and would have done, I know not what, had not his slight procured his safety.

His loving Landlady believing that he was thus really abused, conducts him to her own warm bed, and like a kind friend would not let him lie alone, for fear of catching cold. But his Breech was fo fore, he could not lie on his back; and fo troubled were his thoughts, he had no mind to lie upon his belly. His Landlady finding him fo backward, imagined the cause to proceed from his being too forward abroad with others, and gathered by too many apparent fymptoms, that the was much deceived in his pretended continencie at home; and being hartily vext to be thus disappointed of her expectations, she leapt out of bed, telling him angrily, fhe had more lodgings and Lodgers in her house, and would not be beholden to him for either; and had she known so much before fhe did let him in, as the hath done fince, the would have tried how the cooling Julip of standing in the street all night in his shirt, would have wrought with his feaverish concupiscence.

Netled he was to the purpose to hear his Landlady (who had ever fince their first acquaintance born him a more than common kindness and respect) thus taunt at him; but his thoughts were fo absolutely taken up with a fubject of another nature, that he returned her not one word; which fo exasperated her spirits, not to be replyed unto; that laying afide difcretion, with her modefly, the was refolved to ring him a peal in the carratling-Rhetorick of Billing fgate. How now, (faid she) is it not enough that my Servants, from time to time, have fate up late, or rather early, but that I must be difturb'd from my reft, to give repose to a reftless Stallion? Shall my roof prove the Protector to fuch Caterwawling Night-walkers? Is it not enough, that I have furnished you continually with money, but you must ungratefully make that the Common-procurer of your private Veneries abroad, and those gawdy Clothes I gave you must be the Gentleman Usher that must lead you to them? Are all your former respects come to this? are your hot pretences grown fo cold at home, that nothing can warm them, but a fire in another mans Chimney, made there at my expences? would have proceeded, but that her clamorous tongue interrupted her, by raifing one of Her Lodgers, who came down at that inflant, to know what the matter was; when my Come-Rogue, not induring her rallery longer, rudely bid her, rather than gently defired her to go to bed; begging that the would not trouble him after that manner, charging her with incivility, for diffurbing him from his reft.

The Gentleman, that came down the flairs, hearing this; and judging the had proflituted those kindnesses to one that fcornfully refused them, which he had so trequently follicited her for partly for pleasure, but principally for profit, had not the patience to check her for it in any other place, than these down-right; outragiously bellowing forth, Am not I the oldest Guest in your house, and not a penny in your Debt? Have not I pamper'd you at home, and Coacht you abroad, till I have not had a wheel in my pocket for your extravagant delights to move further on; and have afterwards stab'd my Credit, that you might deliciously feed, and fatiate your felf on the blood of the grape: then (when few refuse to give themselves satisfaction) I have attempted to enjoy what you now prostitute; but you kept me at that distance, I knew not whether your breath stunk or Nay, I have made use of Critical minutes to purchase my desire, more especially then, when I could fee by the flaming of your eves, what confpiracies wine and wanton discourse had formed within you, to fire the Fortress of the most resolved Chaftity. And shall you now be bid to go to bed? be begg'd to retire from your fatiated Lovers embraces? how can you stand thus impudently in your smock in a mans Chamber, and yet commanded to be gone? Come, you forget your felf; your dark-Lanthorn delights have dazzled the fight of your Reafon; and let this (kicking her with his foot) light you to your own Chamber; and withal laying hold on her, would have forcibly thrust her out; which rude carriage of his made her cry out aloud, fearing fome further mischief.

This out-cry fo ftartled my Gentleman in bed, that not enduring to hear his Land-lady fo grofly abufed, got up, and clofing with him, threw him; and having no other weapons, but their fifts, pounded one another to some purpose. The Woman searing what mischief might enfue, put her head out at the window. and cryed Murder as loud as the could bawl: the Watch (hearing murder cryed out) came running to to the house with all speed (not dreaming they should fee again that Spirit which had fo lately frighted them) and perceiving a great buftle in the house, and the same horrid noise continuing, they broke open the doors. and entring, found two men scuffling in their shirts. having blooded one the other fufficiently (this bleeding excused very well theother blood that came from the firked-back and breech of my Gallant) I fay. finding them in this bloody condition, they doubted they had injured one another with fome fharp inftrument: they needed not to fearch farther than their hands, having neither of them more cloathes to conceal anything than what modesty commanded. Notwithflanding they were parted by the Watch, yet they could not hold their hands off one another; which caufed the Watch to interpofe again, and now they refolved to fecure them that night (from further mifchieving one the other) at the Watch-houses, and so commanded them to put on their Cloaths; which the one quickly did, but the other could not. It would have been worth all my revenge to have feen in what confusion he stood, at that word of command, or to have known what the watch-men thought when they faw their Prifoner could finde no Cloaths.

Though their wonder was great, yet they refolved to have their curiofity refolved; and therefore askt him, where were his cloaths, and how he come, or how he could be without them? by the way, furely there was not much wit in that Conflable and his Watch: for had they had any, they might prefently have concluded (from the poflure they found those Gentlemen in) that they were a couple of mendicant Poets, who had but one fuit of apparrel between them, that when the one went abroad, a wheedling, the other was forc'd to lye a bed a ftaring; and difputing who should next fcout abroad to find out the Enemies of famine, and not agreeing upon the point, fell together by the ears. But to return where I left of, the Constable having interrogated him as aforesaid, he endeavouring to excuse himself, and palliate the scuruy ufage of his revengeful Miftrifs) answered him, that walking that after noon, it was his mischance, by a push of that Gentleman they found him fighting with, to fall into a Common-hou/c, (Pox on his witty allufion) and that having no fuit than that, he intended to have lain in bed till it had been cleanfed and dried. That the Gentleman aforefaid would not let him reft. but came into his Chamber, and with fcoffing and irritating expressions, provok'd him to rife, and endeavour to be rid of his trouble.

The other told the Constable, that what was said was agreater lye than the Devil could invent; that the cause of the Quarrel was his endeavouring to hinder his Leachery that night, by preventing his Landlady from going to bed to him. The Woman hearing this, replyed, they were both of them a couple of confounded lyars, and (that she might make one of the number) told them; that they intended to have ravisht her, and that the one breaking up her Chamber-door, the other followed, and fell together by the ears, who should be the first Actor in their damn'd design: to prevent which, she was compell'd to cry out Murther, upon which they withdrew out of her Chamber, and went into one of their own, where (faid she) you find them like a couple of malicious dogs, fighting for that morfel neither of the Curs is ever likely to taste of.

This Forgery was more femblable to probability in the Constables opinion, than any thing else he had Wherefore not to spend further time in examination, he charged his Watchmen with my two Gentlemen, and fo inconfiderately rash he was, that he vow'd they fhould go with him; and had carried them in that very condition, had not the Woman of the house interceeded, that she might cloath his nakedness as well as she could for the present; hereupon she furnished him with a Peticoat of her own, having no other Cloathes that would fit him: inftead of a cloak, fhe helpt him to a red Rugg; and to crown all, fhe clapt upon his head her straw-hat. Had it been daylight, it would have been worth twelve pence a piece to have feen this Slavonian, whose garb, for strangenefs, the barbarous World might admire, but never imitate. I do not hear that he over-flept himfelf that night; nor can I believe that the morning gave his eves no great fatisfaction, in viewing the prepofteroufness of his habit; and his Twinklers lookt, as I am inform'd, as if they had been imployed in nothing all that night, but on looking on the phatasms of ome of his dead and damn'd acquaintance.

I flept but little my felf, that night, partly, by thinking how this revengful, plot of mine would take effect, but chiefly, by reafon of my unfatisfied Bedfellow, who kept me waking, in fpight of my teeth. However I arofe early, and being but a little way diftant, foon got home; where arrived, I underflood from my husband, that my Rings were reflored, that he had left me his Breeches, as owning me his Mafter; and fo he might well acknowledge, for he was never fo whipt for being a naughty Boy, as I caufed him to be; and well he efcap'd fo, having like to have left behind him a most pretious remedy against feveral female diftempers; a Recipe, as infallible againft all manner of obfiructions, as ever was applyed to any Chalk, or Oatmeal Eater, fince Eve lay in with Cain in her first Child bed. Immediately after I heard of the rest of that Knights incomparable Adventures, and how he was secured; and had a particular account of the pleafant dress he was in: never did any thing tickle me more, than the Relation, how amply and fully I was, revenged of him; yet I could not but entertain a thought that might incline to pity him; but it would extend no further then than to send him his Cloathes, and withall a Letter, to give my self the plenary satisfaction of laughing at him; and those sufferings he underwent by my procurement; the words and sense were to this purpose.

The Letter.

Sir,

Am much troubled that one of your age and experiance should prove so meer a Novice in Loves-School, as to be guilty of an amorous erratum, that should deserve the lash: I see now you are a meer Baby in our Sex, and ought to be whipt again into a better understanding. What, trust that Woman whom you have abused! Why, a Child of the first head, in the nonage of Amorous matters, in the Hanging sleeves of Courtship, knew this as a Maxime—that if Love, though never so servent, be once by abuse converted into hatred, the woman is indesatigable in her revenge, till Death hath put an end to the Controversie. Henceforth be better advised from me, how you behave your self before your little Sparkling Goddesses (as wantonly you are pleased to call them;) if you will preserve your good esteem and be dayly cherisht with their Soul-winning and ravilhing Smiles, you must not be relax in your offerings; but if by Righting, cosenage, &c. you instigate their inceft Deities to revenge, nothing but an absence, as distant as the two Poles, shall protect you from their subtle and speedy revenge. And now, thank me Sir, that mine hath fallen fo flightly on your Shoulders, having given a stript Simmar, for the Gown I should have had: I am forry though, I had not secured you witnesses of manhood, that they might have been Testimonies continually by me, to affure my felf you will not for the future abuse my love, by fondly affecting an other. Laftly, hearing that you are clad, as if you were fent Embassadour from the Northern Witches to their Emperor the Devil, I thought fit to fend you some Cloaths (in lieu of those Rings you left with my Husband) which are more futable for humain conversation. But let me advise you. haunt me no more in them, left I conjure you out of them again, and the Devil into you. Bewife, and have a care of being amorous, when pennylefs.

Your abused, in part revenged, &c.

I commanded the Meffenger to observe his carriage in reading the Letter; who told me, all the mad-men in the World, put them altogether, could not in their most extravagant gestures, have express madness so to the life as he did. However, he was not so mad, but that he did put on his Cloaths, which upon old acquaintance so complyed, as to sit him to a hair. Soon after he was discharged; and now invoking the Devil to be of his Cabinet Council, he walkt into a solitary place, that he might hatch mischief, that is, be revenged on me, my Husband, or any else that he supposed might be his rivals. He was quickly furnished with a mischievous design, agreeable to his desire; and how could he otherwise, for there are millions of hellish imps of the worser fort, who continually attend the motions of the malitious and revengeful, to execute the commands of such who care not how they precipitate others and themselves into ruine and destruction.

This ftratagem he contrived, by the help of a little credit he had yet furviving, he puts himfelf into a new riding garb, mounted with fword and piftol; having gotten a Perriwig of a colour clean contrary to what he ufually wore; having for the better carrying on his Plot, procured a falfe beard, with a black patch on one of his eyes; in this difguife, the most discerning eye of his most intimate, and familiar friends and acquaintance, could not have discovered him who he was. In this equipage he rides out of town, some half-score miles, only to dirty his horse and boots; and leaves a Letter with a Friend to be delivered to my own hands, in these terms.

The Answer to the former Letter.

Madam,

Rrather Mad-dame, for the that is madder that you was begotten in Monte Gibello, where troubling the Sulphurous wombe of that burning Mountain, was belcht into the World, and carried on the back of awhirlwind, to disturb the inhabitants thereof. Think not I will trouble my felf to anfever particularly every flouting invective, the which your letter is fluft withal, but shall tell you in general, you are too dangeroufly wicked formy acquaintance; and he that intends to contract a friendship with Hell, must first shake hands with you; your cyes will be his light, to guide him; your cheeks, and breafts, are his high way; and your mouth the gate or entrance thereinto. I do not intend to buy repentance at fo dear a rate, as ever to fee you again; therefore your threats were needlefs. I am not yet fallen in love with my winding-sheet, that I should court Death, or hug a Contagion. My sense of smelling is indifferently well recovered of its late distemper, and can now distinguish the feent of found Bodies from putrifaction. My eyes too have regained their fight, and can plainly fee the fhedevil in you, mangre all the paint, and fucus, that is on that daub'd face of thine. Prithee name me not at any time, best thy breath for ever poyson my memory; and to that intent, forget that ever I had a being; and fo withing thou never hadft one, I take my eternal farewell of thee, &c.

This Letter he fent me, to the intent I might believe he was fo far from revenging himself on me, that he never intended to fee me more; by which means he facilitated his purpose. In prosecution thereof; late in the evening he came to Town, and directed his courfe to our house; upon his alighting, he seemed much tyred, which we verily believed, his horse being all of a foam; and defiring his Chamber might be fhewn him, it was done accordingly; and order being taken for a Sack-poffet, he fupt it up, and laid his head to reft; he lay abed fomewhat long the next day, pretending indisposition by reason of his long journey, but getting up; he feemed fomewhat pleafant, calling for a pint of Sack for his and his Landladyes Mornings draught, affuring me, that as a ftranger he would not be indebted for any civilities he should receive in my house. I on the other side, seeing him fo forward to part from his money, gave him a confiderable lift by my usual way of spunging, Dinner time approaching I askt him what he would have; who ordered me to provide variety of what was in feafon; not imagining that Table, on which this meat should stand, should so soon prove the Stage on which a bloody Tragedy must be acted. A little before we fate down to dinner, I fent for my friend (that lay with me that night I acted my revenge) to participate in our good cheer; who coming, we fate down together, there being no other, than this difguifed Gentleman, my Husband, my Self, and Friend, We did eat, and drink freely; about half dinner this Gentleman feemed to be very officious in helping me, at last, Madam, said he, I will help you to one bit more, which you shall not refuse for my sake; I returning him thanks, in an inftant he whipt off with his knife, my Husbands ear, and laid it haftily on my Trencher; and turning his head quick about, be not angry. Sir, (faid he) you shall have bitt for bitt; and thereupon endeavoured to cut off my nofe, but I was to nimble for him, and by running out escap'd the danger; my Friend observing what had past, being too fuddenly done to be prevented, stept from the Table, and drawing, bid the Rogue difguifed draw too, or he would pin him to the wall, for this matchless piece of villany; whereupon he did, but behaved himfelf fo ill, that my friend wounded him desperately in the body at the first pass; concluding he had received his Mortal wound, he refolved not to die alone. wherefore he made a full pass, and so running upon his Adverfaries point, each dyed at once by the fwords of one another. I foon returned with a long train of Mirmidons, whom I had instructed how to chastife this infolence: but Lord! what a confusion was I in. when I faw the two combatants lye dead on the floor, and my Husbandgazingon them motionless, like one converted into a Statue for the lofs of his ear; which he should have loft, by right, long before that time.

Some more bufiethen the reft, ftirring their bodies, the false beard of the disguised sell off, by which he was presently known who he was; and because it was every where known through the town, how this Gentleman had spent what he had on me, and was abused for his pains; I was immediatly cryed out upon, as the Authoress of all this mischies, I endeavoured to excuse my felf, by relating what he had done; viz. the cutting my Husbands Ear off and the endeavouring to cut off my Nose; but this allegation signified little. Searching his pockets, they sound a note, or letter, sealed, whereing it was directed to me, they then, without my consent, break it open, imagining they should find therein the mystery of this tragical encounter but all they could discover was only his intention of cutting off my Nofe, and my Husbands Ear: the Lines were these which follow.

I Nsatiate Strumpet; perjur'd-painted-Whore, Who hast the vice of all thy Sex, and more, Devil, nay worse; for thou canst by thy face Make Men Apostate in the State of Grace. By thee I fell; then did my Pagan knee Oft render Worship to thy Devilree. I (being converted) Idols won't allow; Dozen must the Dagon of thy face I wore. See where it lyes; that Idol, once ador'd, Must be for want of it, by all abhor'd. Thy Husband lends an Ear, then let thy Nofe. To Sifter-Sense her wretched State disclose, And then confult thy Glass; See thy fare face Is vanisht, and Deaths-head stands in the place. Thy lips some Nectar sipt from I suppose Will be exclaim'd on, fogh, they want a Nose. And may thy sparkling eyes, which me did win, Be thought to kindle from a fire within. May ulcers scize thee, for the wrong that done, And living rott, without compassion.

The rumour of this fad difafter ran fwifter than a Torrent through the Town; infomuch that our house was so cram'd with People, that our fervants were forc'd to acquit their imployments, to give room to the inquisitive In-comers, a chirurgeon was sent for to dress my Husband; & a Coroner to fit upon the other two that were slain; glad I was, that I had the opportune excuse to leave the Company; and attend my Husband; by which means I avoided the hearing so many thousand accrimations that were laid to my charge. In the meantime the Jury sound their Deaths hapned

by Man-flaughter: and fo thereby though we were present, we could not be found accessories.

The noise of this accident did also flye into the Countrey, not escapeing the ear hardly of any one Guest that frequented our House; report had rendred the Fact fo horrible, and my Husband and Self fo notorioufly acceffory thereunto, and now all our former wickedness, and roguery was drawn up in a long Scrol, and this last added in Capitals, to make up a compleat Sum of Villany. By which means we had little refort to our House; and our House-rent being great, and our Tradingfmall, my Husband and I were now necessitated to put our heads together, by some other means to patch up a future lively-hood. Thou feeft, faid he, the more ferious, and reputable fort of People, thun our house, as if old Belzebub were there fitting abrood to hatch those diseases which should be the destruction of the Universe. And therefore to be revenged of their thus flighting us, I will meet them abroad, and what moneys they forbear to fpend with me, I will compel them to lend, and more. Though I am not frout and resolute enough of my felf to do this, yet thou knowest Humphrey our Tapster, is a ftrong Fellow, and hath a good heart; he and I, fear not, will do the bufinefs.

For my part, I must needs confess, I question'd not Humphrey's performances, having made tryal again thereof; I ever fancyed to try experience, and marking what a rough-hew'n Fellow he was, all Bone and Sinew, with a face like atann'd Bulls hide, I could not be at quiet, till I had found the difference between this Man, nerv'd with wire, and others, that were clean limb'd, and streight slender bodyed joynted like Bartholomew Babies, with quaking Custard faces; but fo vast a disproportion between them, that were I

Widdow; and were courted by a Knight worth five thousand pounds a year, with a handsom fair whitely face, I should hardly be perswaded to accept of a Lady-ship, but for the fake of his revenew.

To be fhort, Sir Philip Sidney's Cowards were not much ranker than my Husband; but, thought I, if he hath courage enough to look a Man in the face, and bid him ftand, Humphrey hath ftrength, and valour enough to compel them to deliver. Wherefore I perfwaded my Husband by all means to go forward with what he had propounded: I was the more willing to it, in hopes that he would be taken fome time or other; and as he was marked for a Knave, fo he might be hang'd for a Thief; and fo be freed from an impotent Husband. He feemed well fatisfied that I affented to his propofal, and look'd upon it to be a good Omen, and promifed fuccefs to his undertaking. On the other fide (faid he) you must not be idle at home; you know there is now none but the debauched that refort to our house, and therefore suit their inclination, if ought can be gotten by fo doing. Your daughter is young, and handsom, let her be the fign to attract; but pray let me have you furnish your self with other Utenfils. The Boy too is no fool, who, by observing your carriage, and direction, hath very ill tpent his time, if he cannot tolerably pimp as well for others, as his Mother. Well, well, (faid I) husband, you are merrily disposed; look after your bufinefs, I shall manage my own well enough, I warrant you. My Husband and his Tapster, committed many robberies in a little time; and very few but what were on our Guefts; who freely discoursing their affairs over a glass of Wine after Supper, many times discovering what store of money they carried with them, and for what purpose, gave them a fair opportunity in the Morning to fet on them, and deprive them of it. Nay, fo little fufpected he was of robbing, that feveral have returned to our house after he hath robb'd them, and made their complaint to him, how basely they had been abused; it was alwayes his care, and indeed therein he shewed the utmost of his prudence, to return home with all the speed he might possibly, after he had rob'd any; by which means, he and his

Man rob'd a long time fecretly.

It was generally their good fortune to meet with fuch as durft not fight them; a thing that Travellers generally, and justly, are to be condemned for; who, with eafie parting with their money, they not only fliew how meanly spirited they are, but encourage the Thief in his robberies. Whereas, on the contrary, would they fliew themselves as desperate, and as resolute as their affaulters, it is my opinion they would quickly turn tail, as not daring to venture the hazard of the difpute. Buttoreturn, though my Husband fucceeded fo wellin his attempts, by meeting with none but Cow-hearted fellows; yet once, waiting with his man in a thicket, earely in the morning, for the paffing by of a Gentleman that had lain the night before in our house, who had a considerable Sum of Money, in his Port-mantle, there travelled by another in the dawning of the day, whom, by a miftake, my husband affaults; the other drawing a Piftol, fired it at him, but mift him: however, the report had like to have done as much mitchief, as if the bullet had paft through his body, for with fear he fell from his horse; and had like to have faved the Hangman a labour, by breaking his own neck. Our Tapfter feeing his Mafter fall, and verily believing he was kill'd by that was refolved to revenge his death, had not be feen another come Rideing to him (which was the Gentleman they lay in wait for) which made him altar his purpose, and ride away, for the preservation of his own life. Gentleman supposing too, that he had really dispatcht this Pad, not feeing him move all this while (which he confest to me afterwards, he politickly did, to the intent he might be exempted from fighting, and fecurely fee the event of the Combat: the other two that came to his affiftance judg'd the fame, and advised him to ride away with all speed to the next Justice; not only to avoid the present danger, for (faid he) this other Rogue is rid away but to get some more of his fellows, to make a further attempt) but you will also receive the thanks of the Country, for destroying fuch Caterpillars, that eat up the Fruit of their Land. Setting Spurrs to their Horses away they Gallopt, to find out the next Justice; my Husband perceiving they were gone, got up, and mounting rode full fpeed home, without so much as once looking behindhim. Coming home, he found me almost drown'd in tears, and half frighted out of my wits; not fo much for forrow of his death (which news I had privately fent me by our Tapster) but for fear, as foon as it should be known who this slain Thief was, I should have my goods infantly fiezed on, and my doors thut up. I was in a Room by my felf, getting fome Plate together, with other choice portable things; and coming to the stair head, with an intent to convey them out of the house, met with my Husband full butt; whose face being pale and wan, by reason of his late great fear, poffert me with fo ftrong a conceit, that this was his Ghoft, that the fright made me skreek out, and letting fall what I had in my Apron, I retreated. This fudden furprize fo amazed him, that he flood indeed like an apparition at the Chamberdoor, and had not the power to come in: this increast my belief, however, I pluckt up my Spirits, and boldly askt him, what he was, and what he came for? He fneakingly, in a low voyce, (for he was more than half dead) answered, he was my Husband, and that he came to fee me. My Husband, faid I is dead; and if thou be his damn'd Ghost, I conjure thee, by all that is good, prefently depart, and trouble me not now, fince whilst living, I could never be content, nor at quiet for thee. Not speaking one word, he turn'd his back upon me, and went down stairs. I never believed my felf a Conjurer till now (although I have been called Witch a thousand times) and indeed I knew not what to think of it, (comparing altogether) whether this was a phantafm, or not, but troubling my thoughts no further about that matter, I took up what I had dropt, and getting into the yard, would have march'd off with what I had in my lap, had he not haftened afterme, and holding me faft by the arm, told me, that he was not quite dead, though almost frightned out of his life, and therefore begg'd me I would not remove any thing that might tend to his prejudice; and if I would walk in, he would tell me his whole morning Adventure.

The two Gentlemen coming to the Juftice, amply declared what an eminent piece of Service they had done their Country, by killing on the place one Padder, and putting to flight another; and that if his Worfhip pleafed to Summon a quantity of the Parifh, to defend them if occasion should require, they would shew them the place where the dead lay. Hereupon there were a great many that offered themselves freely to go along; but coming to the place, found neither man, nor horse, nor the sign of one drop of blood. The Countrey People sinding themselves thus abused, and not knowing what the defign of thete two Gentlemen might be, in putting fuch a trick upon them, laid hold on them, and carried them back to the Juftice; who being informed that there was not the leaft appearance of what had pretendedly been done, askt them the reafon, why they thus abufed themfelves and others, with meer forgeries: to which they both replyed, that their eyes had feen what their tongues related, and concluded, that other padders, confederate with this, had carried off the Body of their Brother, that they might avoid fufpition. The Juftice and others were of the fame opinion, and fo the Gentlemen were difmift.

Our Tapster hearing that his Master was in health, returned home, refolving for the future, never to hazard his life with fo great a peice of cowardize; and to fpeak the truth, it was high time to leave off, fince they were shrewdly suspected by the whole Town to be High-way men, they being feen fo often together on Horfe-back, both early and late. My Trade however diminisht not, for I was taken notice of, all the Country round, to be a dealer in fecrets, and ready money commodities; nay, there were not a few honest mens wives, that would not stick to trust me in the disposal of the whole Cargo of their reputation. Nay, I was fo excellent at my art, that neither Privateer, nor Publican would act any difficult matter without my advice. I could Pimp, if occafion ferved most incomparably; and I was lookt upon as the best Procures in all our Countrey; which I would not have been, but that I was fo much tyred with my daily, nay, hourly Vifitants; for though Age and Time have conspired to ruine the glories of my face, I can affure you, the remains may inform any they were good. Being fo generally noted not only for my beauty, but my art in Pandarizing, a Song was composed on me by some riming Doggril or other, which I will sing you thus, and so finish the Story of my former lifes actions,

I. A T the Sign of the Swan
There liveth a man,
I go not about to deceive you;
Ten thousand to one,
If you come, he is gone,

That his Wife may the better receive you.

2. Lovely brown is her hair, Her face comely fair,

Her waste you may span, 'tis so slender;

Negro black are eyes,

Paffing white are her thighs,

All the allurements of Venus attend her.

3. Her Twins of delight,

(Which are alwayes in fight)

Her breafts which are whiter than fnow, By their panting do beat

An Alarm to the feat,

To combate her Lovers below.

4. With her fmiles she invites
To taste her delights;

Which I would, if I durft fo prefume; But I fear she hath fires

Which will quench my defires,

But my body to affics confume.

5. She's an excellent Pimp, The Devils best Imp;

She's a Bawd, the's a tehere, that's too common

If you intend for to fly Hells flames, come not nigh;

Ske's a thing, that is worse than a Woman.

CHAP. VI.

Mrs. Dorothy goes with her new Acquaintance, who perfwades her to accommodate a barren Gentlewoman a friend of hers, with her child, as foon as born. A character of this Gentlewoman, and her amorous practices: the manner of her being rob'd by one of her Gallants; he is apprehended and executed. Mrs. Dorothy is delivered of a Boy, who is made Heir to a great Estate, and she highly rewarded for her consent.

THe Old Woman having thus finisht her Story, fhe addrest her self to me, saying, Dear Heart, you fee how free I have been with you, not concealing from your knowledg any one remarkable passage of my life, though never fo infamous or fcandalous. I, and though our acquaintance is very young, yet put your confidence in me, and question not, but that I shall so affift you in the management of your concerns, that you shall have cause to thank me as long as you live. Hereupon she acquainted me, that there was a Gentleman (not far off) well known to her, that had been married a dozen years and upwards to avery beautiful, and well proportion'd Gentlewoman; yet had no iffue by her; that for want of an Heir, the Estate after his decease would fall to the younger Brother; that it was a very great grief to the Gentleman, but especially to his Wife; and (faid she) this Gentlewoman knowing me to be a person fit to be advised withal about matters of this nature, often fent for me to her house, where some years since, I counselled her to make trial, whether she or Husband was in fault:

in order thereunto I have helpt her at times to the enjoyment of at least a score of several lusty young Perfons. And because I would take the furest way, fhe never had more than one at one time, and him neither not above a quarter of a year together; he then frustrating our expectations, I counsell'd her to make tryal of another. The first I made choice of for her, was a proper young flaxen-hair'd man, tall and flender; a delicate young man he was indeed, whose complexion (being Sanguine) furnished him with more heat than is in any other temperature; which made his hair like fine threads of Gold, twirl in rings, or rather you might call them the lines and hooks with which the little wanton God of love did ufually angle for female hearts; had you feen them, you would have fworn that they were fufficient to catch the heart of a Veftal-Maiden, or the most resolved Votarcfs to Chaftity, that ever had a being. His eyes, quick and nimble, and penetrateing; he had a ftrong fancy, a quick invention, and a most incomparable utterance; and his carriage and deportment was incredible winning; whose single touch of the hand was fufficient to have thaw'd the most congealed-frozen temper in the world into affection. Notwithstanding all these allurements, and seirpromising properties with near upon an half years mutual converse with each other, the found her expectations fruftrated.

Being refolved to make further tryal (for the would not be convinced that the was either defective or barren,) the confulted me, how the might be rid of this her amorous Hot-fpur, and have fome other in his place, of a different conflitution; alleadging that the being of the fame complexion, the verily believed her impregnancy proceeded thence; faying further, that the had heard feveral, as Well Phylitions as others strongly affirm, that the grand reason, why feveral Women have no children, was the too near affinity of their husbands complexion and constitution to their own; and that on the other side, none more infallible enjoy'd the fruits of their labours, the off-fpring of their bodies, than such, whose corporal temperaments were diffimilar or different.

Understanding her humour, I was resolved to comply with her in whatfoever she defired (being so profitable a friend to me) but I knew not how to difplace her Sanguine complexion'd Gallant, who grew by this time a most passionate Lover; at length I bethought me to perfwade him to follicite her waiting Gentlewoman, making him believe that she was ardently in love with him, and that she had a good Sum by her, which would infallibly be at his devotion: my credulous young Gamester greedily swallowed my advice, and followed to a hair my dictations; having won her (for I know not who could withstand him) he came to me, and informed me of the time, and place, that he should commence those delights they intended to continue as long as life lasted; being joyful of this opportunity, I prefently addrest my self to my Mistris, giving an account to her of her friends new courtship, and when it should be consumated; advising her to watch them, and catch them in the act, by which means she should be freed from his suture addreffes, and likewife confirm her Maids fecrefie and fidelity to her. All which she performed, by threatning her Maid to turn her away, and shame her to boot, if ever the affociated her felf, or entertained him again in her house; and calling him false, faithless man, and I know not what, banisht him for ever from her prefence for his unconstancy.

The next Dick I pickt up for her was a man of a colour as contrary to the former, as light is to darknefs, being fwarthy; whose hair was as black as a floe: middle ftatur'd, well fet, both ftrong and active, a man fo univerfally tryed, and fo fruitfully fuccesful, that there was hardly any female within ten miles gotten with child in hugger-mugger, but he was more than suspected to be Father of all the legitimate. Yet this too, proved an ineffectual Operator. She now began to suspect herself of barrenness; but being prompted with hopes, and strangely induced by the sense of pleasure which the reapt in the variety of her amorous Confidents, the refolved on a third, a Gentle-man of her own election, who having been a confiderable time a Student in the Inns of Court, was returned into the Country, to enjoy that plentiful eftate his lately deceas'd father had left him, the antient Seat of his Ancestors; of stature so low, that he could but just take the upper-hand of a dwarf, being only elevated by the pole above him. She was fain at first to Court him, instead of his courting her: and indeed, I could not fee how he could prefume (without her encouragement) to carefs a Gyantefs, fo much taller than himfelf.

There was not fo great a difproportion in their bodies, as there were conformity and agreeableness in their wills; and that the Soul of his which was coopt up, and confined within too narrow limits, became more active and vigorous; fothat attacking herwith a lively and fprightful courage possessed himself of the garrison without a tedious siege of a 12 months courtship, his hair was of a darkish brown, or chest-nut colour, not handsome enough to be awoman, yet too sair to be a man. Though he was not tall, yet nature express no irregularity in his formation; being symmetrical, or proportionably composed from the lines of his face you might have collected Capital Letters enough to have fpelt a Gentleman; and not an action, or expression of his (excepting this of his too intimate familiarity with another mans wife) which did not largely declare the immensity of his Soul, and the virtues that thereunto belonged.

So dearly she loved him, (that notwithstanding he did not answer her expectations in making her Belly fwell) fhe fo doted on his Company, and converfe, that fhe gave her husband too many palpable causes to fuspect her honesty, and integrity towards him. Not, but that for the fake of an Heir, which he question'd whether he should ever get himself) he would be content to wink (as he hath done feveral times) at the freedome his wife hath taken with feveral others besides himself. But looking on my little dapper squire to be to little for that purpose, and that would come short home, as to that business, took an occasion to affront him, that it might produce a quarrel, that should eloign him from his house, and further intimacy with his wife. However, though he had low and undervaluing thoughts of this Gentleman, by reason of his stature, yet he found him in field, full as tall as himfelf in true valour, being (as we fay) mettle to the back. It was the hap of this Gentleman to be desperately wounded by the lesser, and fo dangeroufly, that it was supposed his wounds would end all the future differences between them; however recovering this Combate feparated them eternally.

My Mistris was so well acquainted with the loss of her Gallants, that she was not much troubled to be deprived of the society of this last; but all her trouble was, to get another in his room. Shee applyed her self to me again, her undeceiving Oracle, and received her accustomed comfort, that in a little time I would procure her another, that should outthrow the rest, at least a Barrs length; I was not long in the procuration; for there was a Gentleman that frequented our House, who spent his money very freely, yet had not a foot of land, neither had he any trade, or tools, but the high way, fword and piftol to bring him in a lively hood. He was a lufty well fet man, and red-hair'd; a complexion that hath often gone through-flich. I had often tryed him my felf, and therefore I could the better recommend him to a friend. Oneday (his flock being low, and he at that time in our house) he defired me to lend him half a peice. I being glad of this opportunity, told him I would, and withall defired to confer with him in private; he joyfully accepted my motion, thinking I had fome fecret defign to take my accustomed use for the loan; buthewas ftrangly furprized, and even diffracted with excessive joy, when he heard me tell him, what a Miftris I had provided for him; that he should have his belly full of fporting, & be liberally paid for it too. Weappointed the day when I thould introduce him into his new Miffris's acquaintance, but with this condition, that I should share with him in his gettings. It was concluded on, and he possest of his Treasure, to the full content of them both. My House was now his conflant receptacle, or dormitory, but when he was in the embraces of his miftrefs; and he was very honeft in giving me my thare, my half part, and commonly fpent the refl (to my advantage) of what he had received; and to the intent the more might come into mypocket, I advised her by all means not to flarve his fervice, but incourage him often with fums of money; urging moreover, that the poor Gentleman could not but be at great charges in maintaining himfelf in a ftrange place, exiling himfelf freely from his own habitation, to be near at her Command; befide the great expence he is daily at in coftly broths, jellies, with other provocatives, or reftorers of decai'd nature.

I needed not to have tempted her to liberality, she being naturally prone thereunto; always extravagantly rewarding kindnesses of this nature. She began now to grow very pensive, and unusually melancholy, to see all her swelling hopes thus dasht; and was not so sociable as she used to be with her sriend; which gave him some cause to suspect her inconstancie, or that she would speedily desert him, and accept some other; which put him on the contrivance to save something, that might be a support to him, if his fallary should fail, or at leastwise keep him alive, till his Country-Contributions, or padding incomes should supply his profuse, and unnecessary expences.

When ever he came, the entertain'd him with fuch an undeferved franckness, that she concealed nothing from him, that might either please his fancie, or fatisfie his curiofity. Understanding she was admirable at her Needle, he defired her to shew him some pieces of her art, that he might by the applauding of the one admire the other. She readily condescended to what hepropounded; being glad he had demanded a thing which came within the verge of her power to pleafe Opening a large Cyprefs-Cheft, the him withal. thew'd him great variety of excellent pieces of her own hand-working; and withal he discovered several bags cramm'd with other pieces, which he had a greater minde to handle; which I conceived the flew'd him out of meer oftentation, telling him withal, that as long as one penny was in them his pockets should not be unfurnisht with money; and that when all those bags were emptied, her Husbands annual estate would quickly fill them again, and fix times as many.

This affurance of having his conftant flipend continued, prevailed not in the leaft on this Caret-pated villains ingrateful defigns; but he refolved, with the first opportunity, to make himself Master of those fums, although he knew he must unavoydably lose his Mistress thereby; the next morning she sent for him, to acquaint him, that her Husband was gone fome twenty miles off, and that he would not return in five days, having 300 lib. to receive of fuch a man, naming the place where he lived. This damn'd Dog, hearing this, caper'd for joy, which the poor Innocent believed, proceeded from his thinking what a long time he had to enjoy his Miftress uncontroulably: whereas it was otherwife, for now he knew how to kill two Birds with one stone.

However, that the might not mistrust him as guilty of any treachery, he behaved himself so pleasantly and his Careffes were fo agreeable, that his Miftrefs efteem'd her felf the happieft woman in the world, in the enjoyment of the person of so facetious, and most accomplitht Lover; nav, fo fond the was of his company, that the was refolved to make the most of him in her husbands abfence; and therefore caused him to lie in the house, not induring him out of her fight, till the day before her husbands returne; at which time he walkt out: what feaflings, junketings and jollitingstogether there were in that time, none are better able to conceive than fuch who, with their large purfes, have inlarged hearts, caring not how dear the purchase is, so that the pleasure be great, though not of twominutes lafting. You muft underfland, that I went fnips with him in these delights, as well as in his profits; I had a liquorith tooth still in my head, and therefore would not be out of call, to participate with them in their Viands, and Banquetings; Indeed, I was ever an excellent smell feast.

The day (wherein he went abroad, as I told you) was the curfed time in which he procured affiftants, to carry on his hellish plot, which had like to have proved my utter ruine. It feems he appointed them about four of the clock in the evening to come to the Gentlewomans house, where (as before) we were all making merry; and knowing the strength of the house, there being never a man at home, the Groom being gone with his Mafter, and only a foot-boy left, he appointed only two that should manage the defign befide himfelf; who knocking at the gate, and the foot-boy opening it to them, they inftantly feiz'd him, both binding, and gagging him. Having bolted the Gate, they advanced into the house, and seemingly very peaceful, they mounted the stairs, having fecured those who were below in the same manner, as they had done the boy; as foon I faw two men now entring the Chamber, where we were, I then concluded that we were betrai'd, and that the principal Traytor was our supposed friend; I hereupon opened as wide as my jaws would give me leave; which one of the rogues perceiving, clapt a gag within my mouth, and so kept them at that gaping distance, the Rogues might have had fome confideration before they had ferved me thus, as knowing I had few teeth to barricadoe my gums from the injury they might receive from that confounded instrument which ftretcht my mouth afunder.

The good Gentlewoman, feeing how barbaroufly they handled me, did not question they would exercise the like cruelty next on her; to prevent which, she fell on her knees, beseeching them not to abuse her, and throwing them the keyes of what they lookt for, bid they take what they pleafed. Her accurfed Villain had the impudence to view the tears run down her lovely cheeks, without the least remorfe, or pity on a foul fo dearly loved him, he only raifed her with his hands, affuring her, the thould receive no other injurie than the lofs of what money fhe shewed him, and his eternal happines; for I know Madam (faid he) how infatiate you are, how variable, how changeable upon the flightest occasion; I am not insensible what variety you have already tyred (the more to blame me that imforced him;) and how many more you intend, may be fufficiently drawn from your unfatisfied humour, and inconstant nature. And now if you love your life, ftir not till we are gone; and thank our lenity, that we have not fecured you otherwayes. Taking up the money, every one carrying a part; hold (faid one) we have forgot fomething yet, that Ladies hands must be tyed, least she ungag that ferious and now filent Matron there: her hands and legs muft be tyed too, left fhe talk or walk to fright us. Having fo done, come now let us go (faid the Red headed Traytor) it is high time, left that old witch swallow on of us; don't you see how she gapes? God b'you (good Madam) you are bound to be constant now; dear Partner (pointing to me) farewell, I thank you for your procuration money, and fo away they went; in lefs than half an hour the Gentlewoman had with her teeth fet her hands at liberty, which foon gave my hands, feet, and tongue the like, and diffending the flairs, we found the maids, and boy bound, and gagg'd; having loos'd them the whifper'd her boy in the ear, I knew not what, but it was to fetch a Constable, which he did in an instant; and whilft I was condoleing my Friends lofs, and misfortune, I was apprehended by her command, and conveyed to Goal, there to bewail my own too rigid fate.

I cannot much blameher suspition of me, since there were arguments too many, and strong enough to per-swade her I could not be innocent, and therefore what ever I alledged in my justification stood for a Cypher. I fent for my husband, with many other friends, but none of them could prevail with her from sending me to Prison; seeing there was no remedy, I was resolved to endure my confinement as patiently as I could.

These three rogues had their horses not far off, ready fadled, which they mounting, rode directly in that road where they were fure to meet their prize; and as the Devil would have it, they waited not two hours, before they could perceive two riding directly towards them, and foon after could differ them to be the Gentleman and his groom; the first of an undaunted refolution, but weakly, by reafon of a Chronical distemper, that had a long time afflicted him; his man, by his bulk, shape and looks, appeared like one that could teach a Guy of Warwick to fight, and give a prefident of fuch a valour, as only became a Royal Champion to own. The Gentleman was first commanded to ftand and deliver, which he did, but it was a Piftol, which he discharged without any execution; they siredathim again; and wounding him in the fword arm, he dropt his fword, and whilft he was fubmitting to their disposal, his man sets spurs to his horse, and most valiantly ran for it; getting to the top of a little hill, not far diftant, where turning his horse head, most manfully about, he had the confidence to look on, whileft the Thieves robb'd his Mafter.

The gentleman feeing himself thus deserted by this lubberly-cowardly Hog driver was ready to burst with anger; but knew not how to come at him to be revenged; and therefore begg'd the robbers, in lieu of what money they had taken from him, to do him the kindness, to baste his man foundly that stood on you der hill, as a meer looker on. I, I, faid the one, I will give you that fatisfaction prefently my felf alone, and fo fetting spurs to his horse, rode up to him, and complemented him no otherwife at first, than with the flat of his fword, which notwithstanding made his fides and fhoulders fmart to fome purpose; this great looby took all this with incredible patience; but the Pad by chance cutting him; nay, now faid he, flesh and blood is not longerable to endure; and with that drew a broad two egg'd Scotch-fword, and handled it fo well, that he cut this fellow off his horse presently; the other two feeing their fellow over-matcht, advanced with all speed, and both affaulted him at once: but hefeeing them approach, and being now blooded, made ready to receive them by drawing a Piftol, which he fired fo luckily, that the flot deprived him of one of his enemies more, and he had now no inequality of number to oppose him. Success had so slesht him, that he fought more like a Devil, than a man, laying about him backwards, and forwards: fo that he difinabled the third, which was the first Plotter. Had his Master been able to fight, and there had been as many more against him, he to behaved himself, that there was no work for any to do but himfelf. Thus did this one man, who had never fought before (and thereforelike an horfe, knew not his own flrength till it was tryed) conquer three, that were accounted Cocks of the Hectors.

The Gentlemen fearthing their Portmancicks, and finding 400 lib. was amazed at fo confiderable a purchafe; and fecuring it, with this furviving Rogue, and their Horfes, rode directly to the next Juffice; where leaving the Booty in his hands for the prefent. the Prisoner had his mittimus drawn up, and was sent to the fame Gaol his Lanlady, the Hoftefs was in. Notwithstanding all those disguizes he made use of to seem another man, he was known by me, and received from me a whole broad fide of just reproaches; which had like to have funk him deeper, than the pressures of his present missortunes could do. What (faid I) did you not live too much at your eafe? had you not but too much plenty, which took you off those desperate courses, or might have done, which would without doubt have brought you to the Gallowes in the end; but having fo little regard to your own wellfare, I could not expect much from you as to mine; though gratitude might have commanded you to have ftudyed my prefervation, although you should hourly hazard your own. Inftead of applying fmooth, and foothing answers (which might have been as Cordials, or Balfom to my wounded mind) he gave me this corrafive, this Choak-pear, that if I would not hold my clack, which dinn'd his ears worfe than the Catarachts of Nile, he would declare before the Bench, upon his tryal, that he would never have done fo foul a fact, but by my instigation; and that if I held not my tongue, he affured me, that (fince he knew that it was impossible for him to escape with life) he loved me fo well, that I should dye with him, to bear him company in the other world.

Perceiving what his defperate refolution was, I thought good to alter the Scene of my chat, and beg him to be patient; affuring him, that what I had faid was not out of any ill will, but to make him fenfible how much I was his friend at all times; and that my own imprisonment (for his fake) troubled me not so much, as the danger that he was in; and that he might accuse me, if he pleased, and so endanger my suffering with him; but I charged, withall, his Conscience with my innocencie in, and ignorance of what he and his accomplices had acted, contrary to my privity. It was some comfort to hear him then acknowledge before a great many witnesses, that I was no way accessary to his guilt; and when the Assizes came, he acknowledged upon his Arraignment, that none abetted, or were concerned in what he had done, and there stood arraigned for, but himself and two others, which were slain in the contest. Whereupon I was discharged by Proclamation of Court, none coming in against me; and he received sentence of death, which was accordingly executed three dayes afterward; he then again at the Gallows declaring to the spectators my innocencie in his robbery.

This Consessor

reintroduce me into the favour of the abufed Gentlewoman, my former friend, as by his fuffering death give full fatisfaction to her inraged revenge. In order thereunto, after my Gaol delivery, I fent her feveral Letters to pacifie her passion, and imployed several friends to acquaint her with the reallity of my former fidelity, and prefent integrity: at length they fo far mediated with her in my behalf, that fhe fent for me (when her Husband was abroad) and in the walks of her Garden, discourst me largely, as to whatever had paft between us, or anybody elfe by my means. And now, faid the, this last unhappy and unexpededvillany from a friend you procured me, and one I dearly loved, hath tyed up my hands from ever enjoving the like opportunities again. For my Husband finding that the purchase he took from the Thieves was but a Pig of his own Sow, his own money, and knowing the principal Robber to be the Person I often treated at our house with much civility, shrewdly fuspects, that I not only consented to the Robbery. but would be easily induced to believe to his death too. were it not for the great lofs he knows I should receive by his death if he should dve without issue. However he is much more cautious of me than he used to be, taking his money into his own custody, and he sets a watch over me to observe what company I keep abroad, or entertain in our house: and therefore, if ever you intend to redeem your former credit and cflimation with me, study some project how I may carry on the defign afore propounded, of having an Heir, that the Estate may not pass to the next Brother. A man I cannot but hate, for feveral weighty confiderations. The crookedness of his disposition, and the unfuitableness of his humour to mine, were fufficient to make menot love him; but his infufferable wicked practifes, both against me, and my Husband, make me absolutely detest the very fight of him. When I was first married (quoth she) I thought my felf as capable of conception as any she that ever wore a head; & my husband being then healthful, & actively vigorous, foon confirming me, in the opinion of being a teeming woman: It feems I was with child, though I knew it not; and finding a great change and alteration in my body, I was fo ignorant, as to believe I was breeding fome ill humours, which, if not timely purged away, might ingender a difeafe that might prove my death. My Husbands Brother (which was wifer than my felf in that point) knew very well I was breeding young bones, the growth of which would infallibly lift him out of all his flourishing hopes of enjoying his Brothers Estate; therefore out of a feeming tenderness, and vigilant care of the presevation of my health, followed my own perfwations, with his damn'd advice; and at the end I was induc'd to take a vomit to clear my stomack, he telling me, for certain, it might be very foul, fince I was fo frequently troubled with puking in the morning, and vomiting after Dinner. An Apothecary of his own procuring (with his Devilish instructions) made up the Composition, which, without imagining the least harm, I easily swallowed, which wrought with me so ftrongly, that, having nothing left within my ftomack for it to work on, I thought it would have brought up my very heart within its appurtenances; the Devil of a Physitian all this while feemed to comfort me, by faying, be cheerful, Sifter; this will clear you (and fo it did of what it should not) and clense you of those malignant humours which fo much prejudiced your healthful conflitution; and that he might make fure work of me, counfelled me to take a purge, and that would carry all downwards, and then my bufinefs was done; I poor easie fool, was quickly drawn to it, and the fecond time fwallowed that, which the next day made what I went withal prove abortive.

I had often feen, but more efpecially heard, that this Doctor was no fooner gone from his Patient, but he was immediatly in the Company of my brother, which made me, with a great deal of good reafon, conjecture, they plotted no good together; wherefore I got two Doctors more to vifit my Husband, who plainly told me, at the first fight (both agreeing in one opinion) that he was poyfoned. Hearing them Tay fo, I could not forbear; but, in the agony of my Spirit, cryed out, I know the Murdeters; and their lives shall here, for the lofs of his, make fatisfaction in part, and in full, by their damnation hereafter. They defired me to be patient, affuring me that they would use their utmost skill to overpower the poyfon; and doubtlefsly he had dyed, had not thefe two eminent Artifts bestirred themselves to purpose. In a little time they raised him on his seet (which made his former Doctor betake himself to his, having not been heard of by us since;) but they could not assure me how long it would be ere he would be down again; for (said they) he will be an infirm, impotent man, as long as he lives.

If now my hatred to my Husbands Brother be not justly grounded, do you judge; and I hope Heaven will not be offended with me, in finding out some way to disposses him of his hopes, in having the Estate, who rob'd me of my fruitfulness, and would have deprived my Husband of his life.

Madam (faid I) there is just now a plot come into my head; which if you pleafe, shall be put in practice, and that is this. Since your Husband is thus infirm, and you barren, this must be the only way, which must crown your desires. I will immediately go upon the fearch for fome young thing with Child, whether she be Wife, nor neither Maid, Wife, nor Widdow, it matters not; whom with large gifts, and larger promifes, I will perfwade to part with her Child, when born, and you shall lye in with it; let me alone to the management of all; but first, let me find out a Person suitable to our purpofe, and I will warrant you to carry on the rest to your full fatisfaction. I will instantly for London where I cannot mifs of Subjects enough of this fort, out of which I may pick and choose. She liked this propofal fo well, that fhe would not fuffer me to fray a minute longer with her, but that I should instantly leave her, and make my felf ready for my Journey; and thus far have I travelled in order to the finishing thereof, when I met with fo bleffed an opportunity, of falling into difcourfe with you, Dearest Madam, which I hope will tend to both our happinesses, if you will be ruled by me.

Thus, faid Mrs. Dorothy, I heard the whole relation of her felf, and others, with great attention: and thought it was now my Cue to speak, which I did in this manner, not only cauteloufly, but with much feeming refervedness. Mother (for fo, by the difparity of our Age, I make bold to call you) the account you give of your felf is fo monftroufly wicked that I know not whether, with fafety, I may interchange any further discourse with you; neither can I but take notice of your fubtility, and matchless craftiness, as well as your unparallel'd debauchery, and wantonness; you may very well excuse me, if now I stand on my guard, and wearily entertain a parley with you; fince you are known to be an old Souldier in the Wars of Venus, and fo may fight too cunningly for me, that am but a stripling upon any such account. However make your propofals (and if I may be affured you pump me not to intrap me) as I find them faifable, and profitable for the future, I fhall accept them, and be ready to be fervicable to you, and your defign.

The good old Gentlewoman, as one transported, by hugging me in her Arms, interrupted me, faying; Daughter, mistrust me not in this affair, and try whether I will not in a little time make you as happy as your own wishes can make you; and thereupon asked me how long I had been with Child, and whether I could be content, that, by anothers owning it, the Child hereafter might be owner of an Estate (it seems born to) the tenth part whereof none of my Ancestors ever vet enjoyed.

It is confest, faid I, my own weakness, and Female frailty betraid me to unlawful embraces of a handfom young man, whose subtle follicitations could not be withftood by a Nun, much less by me; and vielding. I now carry both the Sin and the shame of those stolen delights about me, where ever I go. That though it was my ill Fortune thus to lofe (by one throw at play, inconfiderately) a thing of that value, my Maiden head I mean, yet it was fome comfort to me, that it was a Gentleman of no mean worth that won it; and I question'd not but the offfpring would be like the Father, as well in the comely proportion of the Body, as Gallantry of Mind; being thus fully perfwaded it will prove fo goodly a Person, it will the more trouble me to part with it to another; that if I should do any such thing it is not for necessity; for, as I had money considerable of my own, before my deluding Lover came acquainted with me; yet, to compensate that fingle kindness, he hath so showred his Gold and Silver on me fince, that my Wealth may procure a Match confiderable enough, though my face carryed in it no other invitation. Come, come, Daughter (faid the Old Woman) Something hath fome favour: and although you have enough, yet more will do no harm; besides your Child will be well look'd after, well provided for (which you may fee when you please) and you rid of that incumbrance, will be in a better condition for any one to follicite you in Marriage. Being thus convinc'd by the fubtle Arguments of this cunning Matron, I condefcended to whatever the would have me to do; and fo without further delay, the next morning we rode together to the House of this old Gentlewoman; where alighting, the had no fooner provided a necessary Room for me, and given order for my Supper, which was extraordinary, but her impatience immediately hurried her to the Gentlewoman, her Friend; and being out of breath, told her, as well as fhe could, that fhe had effected the bufiness beyond expectation; but because she would not leave me too long, begg'd her excuse, promising the next morning a sull account of all her proceedings. That night was spent in all the jollity imaginable; Fowles of all forts, and the choicest of the season were provided; Wine flowed so plentifully through every room of the House, that I wonder it did not reel into the streets. I am sure the servants would, had not a noise of Musick held them by the ears, whil'st their Legs caper'd like a pair of Drum-sticks. Although they took but little repose that night, yet my Hostess got up early to wait on her Correspondent, who had not slept that night, for the eager expectation to hear how her defires were accomplisht.

But overjoyed the was, when the faw the old Woman approach, who taking her afide in one of the walks of the garden, askt her how the had fped, and in what manner. The old woman (as much transported with joy as the) have patience, and I will tell you, faid the; In my way to London, I met with feveral that had nibled on the bait of concupifence; but they were fuch flounder-mouth'd, draggle-tail'd, dirty Puffes, that I would not venture upon any of them; but at length comming to an Inn on the road, I accidentally fell into the Company of a Gentlewoman (which is this that I have now brought with me, to be ferviceable to you) who by her deportment informed me, that the was not meanly extracted; and by those wanton torches in her face, which Nature had drawn to allure, and captivate hearts, I guest she was not unacquainted with the Mafculine gender; and as I imagined, fo it proved; for I have fo rigled my felf by difcourfe into her concerns, that I foon made her unravel the bottom of her fecrets. To be fhort, I found her every way fit for our purpose, and by an extraordinary device, I have made her ours; and that you may fatisfie your felf farther, I will bring her to the Park, a mile from your house, where I shall desire you to meet us in the afternoon. Hereupon the departed, and acquainted me how she had opened the way to consummate what we had agreed on; and so having dined, we went to the place appointed, where the Gentlewoman was already come to meet us.

The Gentlewoman feeing us at a distance, made up to us, but was ftrangely aftonisht when she saw a person so unexpectedly handsome, and in a Garb which as much exceeded that which fhe wore, as the face she faw excelled most others that she had seen before; and therefore thought it requifite to make her address, as to a person of no mean Quality; yet thinking again, should she do fo, I might think she mockt me; (for had I been nobly born and bred, I would never have condescended so low, as to prostitute my body to the unlawful embraces of fome hotblooded Gallant, and afterwards mercenarily expose the Infant to the difpofal of a meer ftranger:) therefore familiarly thus the spake; Sweet-heart, Though I never faw you before, I am not unacquainted with your affairs, and am much troubled, that fo good a face should be so deluded, and grosly abused by any Promise-breaker of them all; but since what is past cannot be recalled, I shall endeavour to redrefs your misfortunes, after this manner; you shall lodge with a good old Gentlewoman, not far off, a friend of mine: but be fure you keep your felf private; and when you have a mind to take the air, and enjoy your felf, you shall not want a Coach to carry you whither you lift, so it be far enough off: your provision at home, with all things necessary, and your expences abroad, shall be at my charge; all that I shall require of you is, that when you cry out in labour, your Childe may be at the dispose of your Landlady, whom I constitute your Guardian. If in the interim you want any thing, let me know it, and you shall be supplyed, and enjoy your self as freely, as if you were Empress of the whole World; and when you are discharged of your great belly, you shall not want a fum to make you a good portion for any honest man. Be not seen in the Town, and do not come to our house, but be ruled by your Guardian'; and affure your felf this, your Child shall be my Child, and what estate I have, or my Husband, shall be his: and so she took her leave of me, cramming my hand full of Facobuffes, as the earnest of a better penny.

I was forthwith conducted to this house, which was intended for my lodging privately, where I was entertain'd, according to instruction, with much respect and gallantry; a Maid was there ready provided to attend me, and there was nothing wanting in my entertainment to make my life comfortable, and my looks cheerful. Here did I merrily pass my time away, being often visited by my old Hostes, daily puzzling each others invention, what we should have for Dinner; what recreation in the asternoon; what for Supper, and what divertisement asterwards; how to make our pleasure more poyant by their diversity, and variety; but the greatest difficulty lay in our cunning projections of going abroad, which we knew we must carry with a world of secrecie, or spoil all what ever we intended to do.

In the mean time, the Gentle-woman (understanding my true reckoning, which was three moneths gone with Child) calculated her time accordingly, and gave out, the was with Child: every one admired at the news, having not had any in fo long a time of marriage, and knew not whether they had best give credit to the report; her Husband would not be induced to believe it by any means, looking uponit as incredible, nay, almost impossible; but that which most of all favoured what she would have credited was her being troubled at that inftant, with fome hydropical humours, which had fo fwelled her belly, that the had much adoe from perfwading her felf, that she was really with Child. Her Husband perceiving this, from an Unbeliever became a Convert, and by his belief wrought all the Neighbourhood into the like perswation: but that which knockt the nail on the head, was the opinion of the Midwife (a Creature of the Gentlewomans, made absolute to her devotion by gifts, and promife of future rewards) which proclaimed it every where as a wonder, that one after fo many years, having never born a Child, fhould now at last conceive. Neither was the kind, and over-indulgent Husband, backward in spreading oftentatiously, his glory, that he should at last be called Father, when all the glimmerings of those hopes were quite extinguisht. His joy made him fo rash and inconsiderate, that he bespoke Gossips, and concluded upon a name for it, though he knew not whether it would be born alive, male or female. the other fide, the feemingly over-joyed woman provided clouts for the bantling, and all other things neceffary, which an over-bufie Lullaby could invent. So many wet Nurses were sent for, that they came tumbling to the house by dozens; and so many faults were found with them, that they Troopt off again as fast; one was diflik'd for her Hair, it being of a red colour, and therefore her milk was lookt upon as too hot, rank, and venemous; every one giving in their Verdict, that the should not be wholesome, since the Turks were accustomed to make the rankest poyson of the flesh of flaves that were red-hair'd. Another was too tall, and therefore flothfull, and unactive, being not talkative enough; a third not clear skinn'd, nor well featur'd, having a cast with the eye, which might be the ill pattern of directing the Childs eyes amifs: a 4th. had a too indulgent husband, whom they feared one time or other might curdle the Child's milk, and fo endanger its health: a fifth had had formerly fore Breafts, and they doubted from thence the Milkyway might be polluted: a fixth was too melancholly enclin'd, which they judged would not only prejudice her fuck, but deprive her of the talking qualifications of most Nurses, who look upon the impertment nonfenfical tittle-tattle to their Children, to be the basis of all their future learning. With much adoe, they at length pitch upon a lovely brown woman, full grown, well featur'd, quick fighted, clear skinned, middleftatur'd, with breafts little and round, her blood cirkling them in the pleafant blew Meanders of her Now left they should loofe her, if she went out of their fight, the was hired, and entertained into the house immediatly, although her Mistrifs had five moneths to go of her supposed time.

Though her Husband was extafted with joy, his Brother was moved by a contrary paffion, his folly making him thew it, in to unfeemly a way, that every one now concluded him that, which they only furmized before, a villain, that had both ftudied and practifed the ruin of his nearest relations; & he was often accused & upbraided for fo doing, that he was forc'd to leave the Town, and fince is gone to a Cozen of his living in Barmudus.

My time began now to draw nigh, being groan fo bigg I could not with convenience ftir abroad, and too restless to stay at home. As I selt any pain, I caused my Mistrifs to be acquainted therewith, that she might be fo too; if I felt my felf much difordered, I fent away her confident prefently to allarm her; who acted her part as artificially, as I did it really. These out-cries of hers made the whole Garrison continually stand to their arms; there being about her continually the Midwife, Wet-Nurse, Dry Nurse, with many Neighbouring affiftants: the Maids below ready at command, and a Man Midwife, if need should require with fo many inftruments ready fixt, as would with the very Iron fet up a Black-fmith: and all for the ftrangeness of shape, surpassing any rarity in Tredescants Collection.

After fo many falfe allarms, a true one came at laft, carried by our Confident aforefaid, with my Child in her lap; whose very appearance was watch-word enough for the Gentlewoman to express the pangs of Child-birth, which shedid then in a more violent manner than before, imagining fomething more than ordinary: fhe approaching the bed askt her lowdly how fhe did, and how fhe felt her felf, and at that very instant clapt the Child into Bed to her; who immediately skreeking out, the Midwife ran to her, where feeming to be busied about her a while, at length takes the Child from her, and doing with it, and her, as is ufual; the news of this her happy delivery was conveyed to the Husband, who was near at hand, attending, and with tears lamenting the fad pain his poor wife underwent for him; but the joyful tydings of having a Son born, wip'd away all those tears, and so animated his feeble Carkafs, that he would have entred the Room, before it was either Civil, or Convenient, had he not been flopt by meer force. I shall not trouble you by relating what an Universal reioveeing there was through the whole house, but only inform you, that before the expiration of a moneth the Child was Christened, being as lovely a Child as could be born of a Woman, not any limb or part of his body, which did not promife to exceed his true Father in every thing. The Gentle-woman being up, as foon as fhe understood I was well and fully recovered, appear'd abroad in publick, whose happy delivery was by all congratulated. And to gratific me, the fent me an hundred pieces of old Gold, defiring me to remove my Quarters, and to engage my tongue eternally to conceal the fecret.

I now thought it high time to fend to my two Gallants, who were obliged to me in bonds, the one to pay me fourty pound, and the other fifty, upon my delivery; they being both affured of the truth thereof, delayed me not, but fent me my moneys by the first conveniency, which added to my late purchase; and what money I had before, made up to weighty a portion, for fo light an Houswife as my felf.

CHAP. V.

Mrs Dorothy relates feveral passages in the Inn: as, how the Host drew Guests to his House, and then cheated them: the Boy by his Example, attempts to cheat, but is taken in the manner; is beaten by his Mistris, but is revenged of her and his Master; is turned over to be corrected by the Under Hostle, but is wittily, and pleasantly revenged on him.

I Was now (continued Mrs Dorothy) rid of my great Belly, and inftead of that, had a great Bag of money; and my Child being thus provided for, as I have told you, I retired from the place where I had lain in private, now to appear in publick at the House of my very good friend, the old Crony; part of whose Adventures I have already related to you: and since you have not thought me tedious in the discourse I have already made you, I shall give you an account of some such Transactions in her House, during my stay there, which, I believe, will be no less pleasant than what you have already heard: and then having made a short pause, we thus proceeded.

The whole Family, confifting of her felf, her Husband, a Son of about twenty four years of Age, and Daughter about nineteen, a Chamberlain, a Tapfteror Winer, an Hoftler, Cook-maid, Scullion, and two or three boyes; who were imployed under the others, were all alike, knavifh enough, all guilty of fuch unparallel'd Knaveries as I have rarely heard of; and knowing of one anothers tricks, they out-vyed one another, ftriving and contending which should exceed in Roguery, and so fly and cunningly they carried it, that twas difficult to discover them, especially when they all joyned together to cheat or abuse any body; but when they fell out among themselves, they made excellent sport in acting the revenges they took upon one another, My Landlord loved his pleasure and prosit so equally, that he made it his business to contrive how to joyn them together; and although he commonly had the best Custom of any house in the town, yet he would practice wayes to gain, and bring in more; among other wayes, he used this for one. He would take his Horse in an Asternoon, and ride out some ten or twelve miles, and so return home again; but he feldome came home, but he brought Guests with him, which he would take up by the way, thus.

If he faw a parcel of Travellers, who he thought to be good fellowes, and fit for his purpose, he would then enquire which way, and how far they travelled; to this they commonly answered, directly; and if they were for our Town, then he would joyn with them; and foon after, his fecond question would be, to know if they were acquainted at the Town, and at what Inn they would take up their Quarters: If they were strangers, and by that means indifferent of the place where they fhould lodge; then he told them, that the best Innin the Town was his House, but not naming it to be his, or that he had any Interest in it, but only that he knew there was a good Hoftefs, who had a handsome Daughter that would use them well; and he feldom miffed with this Bait to win them to agree to go thither with him, and accordingly to bring them home with him. But if they would not agree upon the place, and he faw there was no good to be done, then he would pretend fome excuse to stay behind them, & would wait for fuch company as would at all points be for his turn; and with them would he enter the House as a Stranger: indeed he would call the Chamberlain, Hoftler, and Tapster, by their Names; but they, who knew their Duties, would in no case shew any Duty to him. Then would he, as being acquainted in the House, tell his Fellow Travellers what provisions there was for Supper, and would be fure to draw them up to the highest Bill of Fare he could. If the Hostess, or her Daughters company were defired, he would be the forwardest to call them, and only treat and converse with them as of fome fmall acquaintance; after supper, he would endeavour to draw on the Company to drink high, and use all possible means to enflame the reckoning: and when he faw they were well heated with wine, and the fury of their expences was over, he would pretend, out of good Husbandry, to call for a Reckoning before they went to bed, that they might not be mif-reckoned, or staid from the pursuit of their Journey in the Morning; to this they would commonly agree, and the Sum total of the reckoning being cast up, he would be the first man that would, without scruple. or inquiry into the particulars, lay down his share, and by his examples, the rest would follow; if any did question the dearness of the Victuals, or the quantity of the drink, he would by one means or other take them off, protefting that the Hoftess was too honest to mis-reckon them, and that he had kept a just account himfelf, and was well fatisfied; or elfe he fhould be as cautious from parting from his money as any of them; and then they, not diffrufting him further, would by his example pay the shot. Thus would heemany times, by his Crown or fix shillings share, mif-reckon on them fixteen or twenty shillings; especially if they came to high drinking: and then the reckoning being paid, they went to bed, he retiring with his wife, and he would lye abed in the morning, and let them march off alone; but if they, in the Morning, did fall to drinking again, taking a hair of the Old Dog, then would he up, and at them again, make one at that fport, and many times put them out of capacity to Travel that day, and fo keep them there to his profit, and their expences; he shifting his Liquor, and in the end, shifting himself out of their Companies, when he has seen his Conveniency, leaveing them to pay roundly for their folly. If they enquired after him, my Hostess would pretend he was a Chance Guest, as they were, only, she had seen him the last year, or such like; and thus he would force a Trade, and enjoy his pleasure and profit, by joyning them together; and this course did he frequently use when Guests came not in of their own accord; so that our house was feldome empty.

As mine Hoft, who was the Head and Chief of the House, had his tricks, so had the rest of the Family theirs, even the least in the House; for there was an unhappy boy, who was fometimes with the maid in the Kitchin, fometimes with the Tapster, attending Guefts in their lodgings, and other times, with the Hoftler and Horfes in the Stable; this boy, though he was little was witty; and feeing that every one had their tricks, he cast about how he might have his, and have fome profit in the Adventure; fo that one day, mine Hoft being abroad, and the Tapfter out of the way, he drew the drink; and not only the Beer, but carried bottles of wine to the Guefts, & feeing them in a merry vain, he thought to try his skill at mif-reckoning them; and for fix bottles which he carried into them when they came to pay, he reckoned them eight; and though there was fome questioning of the truth, vet he juftified it, and flood to it, that he had the reckoning he demanded.

Part 3.

This being his first considerable attempt in this Nature, for he had gained two shillings for himself, he was refolved to keep the prize for himself; and therefore putting that up in his Pocket, he delivered the rest at the Bar; the reckoning being wiped out.

But the Company falling into discourse, in short time called for more wine, and then the Tapster being returned, he officiated in the boyes place, and turning him into the stable; more wine they had, and staying longer than ordinary, and falling again to drinking, they quaffed off the other half dozen bottles of wine, and then calling to pay, the Tapster, thinking to put his old trick of mif-reckoning in practice, told them, there were feven bottles to pay; but one of the company who was more cautious than the rest, had made his observation, and every bottle that was brought in, he unbuttoned a button, and fo was able to aver and justify that there was but fix; and withal, the rest of the company believing him, they all fell a ranting, vowing that they would pay for no more, and farther alledging that they were mif reckoned one or two bottles in the last reckoning; the Tapster, although he was guilty as to himfelf, yet he did not believe them as to the other reckoning, because he could not imagine, that the boy would be fo bold as to attempt to cheat them, and therefore he huff'd as high as they in justification of the boy and himself; and such a noise they made, that the Hostess went in to know the cause of that clamour: they at first were so hot on both fides, that they would not hear her fpeak, neither did they fpeak reasonably themselves; but in the end she understood the matter, that they were wronged of one or two bottles by the Boy, and one by the Tapfter; fhe hearing the matter, did not fo much stand to justifie and vindicate the Tapster, whom she did imagine was guilty, but as for the boy, she was very confident, that he had not wronged them, and when the heat of their anger was fomewhat over, fhe examined particulars enquiring how many bottles they paid for, they faid eight: the who had not fo foon forgotten what she had received, averred that she had but fix shillings for wine, and therefore it was a mistake; they still aledged cight, and she fix: till now nobody could end the controversie but the boy, who was fought after, and in fhort time found in the hayloft afleep, or meditating how he should bestow his purchased Treasure; but being found, he was without any questions there immediately led away before the Gentlemen and his Mistress, who were to be judges of this matter of fact. The question was soon stated to him, and he too well understood the matter, which he stoutly deny'd, but there was quickly fuch clear evidence appeared against him, that he was found guilty; for he not dreaming or mistrusting any such matter, had not conveyed the money away, fo but that the pockets being fearched, there the two shillings were found, to the great shame and confusion of the small delinquent: this was to the great amazement of the Guests, his Mistress, and the Tapster; but the money being laid down, and two bottles wine being brought in for it, the Gentlemen were well enough pleafed, and made no further enquiry into the other bottle, which the Tapfter had likewife mif-reckoned them; fo that he scaped without shame or punishment, fo did not the boy, who was not only ashamed, but was ordered to be feverely punished, and therefore the next morning was fetched up by the under Hoftler, (ene who was not fo wife as the boy, though in growth he was much biggar) with a Cat of nine tailes, which gave fo great an impression on the poor boyes buttocks that he was refolved on a revenge, which he effected, as I shall prefently tell you. This boy was now looked on as an errant cunning Rogue, and one who without good looking to would be too wife for them all, for he had prefumed to mif-reckon two shillings in fix hillings, and put it all into his own pocket, whereas the Tapster who was a proficient in cheating, and licensed therein (but with this proviso, that half of what he gained thereby was to be paid to his Mistress) only endeavoured to mis-reckon one //illing in fix; fo that, I fay, the boy was narrowly watched, and had many a blow on the back, and box on the ear, more than formerly; he who knew he had deferved it, for he was guilty of many petty waggeries, was forced to bear, but however he made provision against it, for his Mistress using to pommel him on the shoulders with her fift, he one time took a paper of pins, flicking them with the points upwards, placed them between his Doublet and Caffock; and his Miftress striking him, as she was wont to do, did light upon the pins, pricked her hand till the blood ran down her fingers ends, and the boy running away, she could not imagine how this was done, for the faw nothing upon his coat, that should cause it; so the boy getting away, removed the paper with pins, and there was an end of the matter for that time. The Miffress finding the had fuffered by ftriking him on the shoulders, would come no more there with her bare hands; but used a cudgel, if it were near her, and if not she would use to flap him on the mouth with the back of her hand; and one time, he being in the Kitchen, and fhe running after him to strike him, he claps a knife, which lay near him, into his mouth, with the edge outwards, fhe not minding that, but endeavouring and intending to give him a great blow did fo, but to her cost, for she cut her knuckles in such pitious manner, that the blood ran down abundantly, and now it was no fooling matter, but Chyrurgions work, wherefore one was fent for, and the boy ran away to his wonted dormitory, the hay-loft. The Mistress took her Chamber, and towards Evening the Mafter came home, and bringing with him fome Guefts, he foon miffed his wife, and thereby knew the occasion of her retirement, and it was not long ere he faw the boy, the Authour of the harm; he therefore took up a cudgel, and ran haftily after the Boy, who fearing the danger, betook him to his heels, and ran crofs a dunghill in the yard; the Mafter being eager to purfue the boy, did not take the fame course the boy had done, who had paffed over a board he had laid there on purpofe, but the Mafter miffing of that, went on one fide, and fell into a great filthy hole, which by reason of much wet and rain, was there flightly covered; and had he not been helped out by the Hoftler, he might have stifled; he having recovered his feet. left the purfuit of the boy, and was forc'd to be conducted to bed, which was to his great grief and dammage, for he had spoiled his cloaths, wet himself, and which was worst of all, he by this means was disappointed of his purpose in making a prey of his guests he had brought in with him to that purpofe. But the Tapfter and others, did their best in that behalf, and the Boy was again committed to the disciplination as the under Hottler, who by the command of his Mafter. almost slead the poor boys buttocks.

The Boy was now revenged of his Mafter and Miftrefs, who finding him to unlucky, had no great mind to meddle with him, neither did the Boy fluddy any revenge upon them; but to often as he faw the under-Hoftler, who had now twice been his tormentor, his blood would boyle at him, and all his fludy was to be even with him; and thereupon he watched for all opportunities, and it was not long ere he found one. There was meat at the fire to be roafted, and he was ordered to look to and wind up the Jack, which was made to go by a stone weight, which was fastned to pulleys, and when the Jack was woond up, the stone weight being on the out-side of the house, was drawn up two ftorves high, to the eves of the house; the boy observing this, and that the Jack-weight was down, and feeing his Enemy the under Hostler in the Yard, just by the jack-weight he lifted that off from the hook, and conveighed it under the girdle of the Hoftler, just behind, he not perceiving it: when he had thus done, he ran into the Kitchin, and woond up the Jack, the Hoftler being none of the wifest, wondered what it was that first of all held him by the back, and afterwards drew him up from the ground; but it was too late ere he discovered the truth, for he was now hanging in the aire; his girdle was of strong leather, with a great brafs buckle and thong, which he could not possibly undo; neither durst he attempt it for fear of falling, and therefore he was in fhort time drawn up to the top; the boy not thinking this revenge not enough, feeing no body came, proceeded further, and taking a parcel of wet horse-litter, and some dry hay, he placed it just underneath the Hostler, and set fire to it, which made fuch a fmother and fmoke, that the poor Hoftler was almost choaked, wherefore he roared out most hideously; the boy having done all he intended, faid, Now remember the Cat with nine tayles, and fo ran away; by this time the Hoftler made fo much noife, and the jack together, being forced by weight to go faster than ordinary, that at the noise all the houshold ran to see what was the matter, when, in short, there was found the poor Hostler hanging between heaven and earth, and with coughing and roaring he purged forwards and backwards, but most backwards; in regard his girdle forced it downwards by pressing and gripeing his stomach, so that he was in a most lamentable pickle; and sogreat was the astonishment of all the beholders, that he was come down almost to the bottom, ere the smoaking hay was removed, or he relieved; but at length down he came, and thus ended this adventure.

CHAP. VIII.

The Boy learns, and practifes Vaulting and tumbling, the maid fervant attempting to do the like, is intangled, caught in the manner, and laughed at: the puts a trick upon a Puritanical Church-Warden, and makes the boy by another trick, to lye in bed, and lofe his dinner; he is revenged on her by a Gunpowder plot.

MRS. Derothy putting a ftop to her discourse, gave us conveniency and leisure to express our fatisfaction by our laughter, in which we continued for some space, and then rehearing and commenting on what she had told us, we again renewed our laughter, the joyning with us in the same exercise, when we had put a stop to our mirth, she thus continued.

Truly, Friends, I did think I might a little divert you by my relation; but I fee you are pleafed much better than I expected, and if you are fo well contented with this which is but a tafte of what I can tell you, I am fure the rest would be much more delightful; but being defirous to put an end to my discourse, by relating to you such matters as only concern my felf, till my arrival here, I therefore beg Nay, replyed I, and Mistress Mary, vour excufe. you must not resuse us the request we both make you, of proceeding in these pleasing Adventures of your houshold; and, continued I, it is enough to know and find you are here with us, we are fatisfied in that, and hope you will give us the other fatisfaction we defire; and I pray be as full and free in your recital as you can, for we cannot think any thing to be tedious that is fo pleafant; fhe hearing my defires, after few excuses, agreed thereto; and thereupon she thus reaffumed the difcourfe.

The poor under Hoftler being thus descended from his place of Torment, was almost in as pitiful a plight as one taken down from the Gibbet half hanged to be quartered; he had as little motion or fense; for he was almost suffocated with the smoak that ascended and flew up his nofe, and down his throat; and as Malefactors do (as they fay) pifs for fear, or fome other caufe, fo had he done; and not only fo, but we could perceive fomewhat elfe, of a yellowish colour, that had foaked through his breeches, run down his ftockings, fo that few would touch him; but at length, the Hoftler, his fuperiour, confidering his condition and former good fervice, took him up, and carried him to his bed adjoyning to the Stable; where, with the affiftance of Aqua vita, he was foon brought to his former fenses. Our young Rogue in the mean time lying in the Hay-loft over him, laughing at the roguery he had done, and the groans he heard the poor fellow fetch, were as so many instruments of musick to raife his laughter to the higher pitch.

This Rogue, who wanted nothing fo much as Roping, or a good Cat of nine tailes, now escap'd with out either; there being no body in the whole house that had any mind to meddle with him; he was threatned by fome, whilft others only laughed at him, and he went merrily about his business: and to conclude, much company coming that day to the house, and the particulars of the Adventure being told them, they fent for the boy and Hoftler; and after feveral questions, and much laughter, they made them drink to one another, and become Friends.

The boy being thus freed from punishment, set his wits at work, how he might employ his time to the best advantage, and be getting of money as well as the rest of the Family did; and soon after there being a fair at our Town, among other fooleries that attended it, there were a parcel of Rope-Dancers, and Tumblers; our boy was Mafter of fo much money, as to fee them two or three times; and having very much affection to that quality, he purchased acquaintance with fuch another Crack Rope as himfelf, who was a very nimble and active youth at the Art of Vaulting; him he invites to our house, and treating him with fuch as the House afforded, by all means defires his instructions in that nimble mistery; he foon affented, and our boy being ingenuous, and very willing to learn, foon attains to the knowledg of this miftery, and taking all opportunities of practifing, could foon leapthrough a hoop, vault over two or three joynt ftools, tumble on the ground in various manners; and being a pretty proficient, had money feveral times given him by Guefts that came to our houfe, for thewing his tricks; by vertue of his money he would brag and vapour as well as the best in the house; and the rest of the servants feeing his gain would attempt to do the like, but many times came off with the breaking of their fhins; amongst the rest, the Cook maid had a mighty great itch to learn and practife some of these tricks belike, fuppofing that if he, who was a boy, did get fo much money by them, that then she might gain much more being a maid; and that she might as well do them as he; the obstacle of Petticoats she removed by, refolving when she had learned, to have a pair of Breeches and Doublet for that purpose, and that she questioned not, but to get money enough, it being a greater Novelty to fee a woman in breeches; but before the purchased them, she resolved to practice in her ordinary Habit, her Petticoats, and did fo when the had convenient time and place; fo that the likewife could perform formwhat in that practice. One time most of the other fervants being abroad, she was fent into the Cellar to draw a Gallon Pot full of Claret Wine; she believing it would be fome time ere it were full, by reason it ran only through a small Cane whilest the Pot was filling, she lies down on her back, and resolved now to try whether she could put her feet in her neck, in order to practice fome new trick of tumbling; flee foon put one there, and with fome difficulty likewife put the other, when she had so done, fhe could not possibly undoe what she had done, her feet were as fast to her neck, as if they had grown there; and though she tumbled and tossed, yet it was all to no purpose, for she could not by any means disentangle, or difengage her felf from the posture she was in; fhe finding her felf in this condition, knew not what to do, for the Pot was now full, and the Wine ran about the Cellar, and with tumbling about the had made her Coats to fly about her ears; at length fhe refolved to cry out, hoping her Miftrefs, or fome other of the females of the house might hear her, and come to her rescue; this resolution she put in execution, and cryed out amain, help, help; we were all in the Room over her. and therefore foon heard her voice, but not knowing whose, or what was the matter; mine Host at length faid to the boy, firrah, run down into Cellar, and fee what is the matter there; the boy did fo, and after fome little ftay came up again, and cryes out, Oh Heavens! Mafter, I think our Cook-maid is murthered for I went down, and there lyes her body without a Head, and a great deal of blood about her (which was the spilt Claret) but, said his Master, are you fure her head was off? yes, yes, faid the boy, come fee how it is cut of from the neck; and yet, continued he, I cannot think the is yet dead, for the moved her hands, and still cryes out, but her head I cannot find. Mine Hoft hearing of this ftrange matter, foon ran down into the Cellar, which was not fo dark, nor he fo dim fighted, but he prefently discovered how the The only thing he did, was to ftop the matter was. Wine from running out, by putting the spiggot into the saucet, and so returned up to us, and told us that the boy was a little mistaken; but such a sight had he feen as was very unufual; and thereupon defires us to defend into the Cellar, and fee what he had done; no fooner had he faid fo; but our curiofities likewife induced us to go down, where in fhort time we likewife had the fatisfaction of feeing this strange fight: how faid I, this is fome Monster, and it would do well to keep it in this manner till the next fair, and then we may gain more by it then all the Tumblers did. A pox of Tumbling, faid mine Hoftefs, I believe this came from that Exercise.

We thus having fpent our Verdicts, helped the wench to difingage her felf, and put her in her wonted natural pofture; but when fhe was fo, fhe was not come to her felf, fo much was fhe fpent with ftrugling, and her joynts were fo out of order, that we were forced to lead her up ftairs, and put her to bed.

Shewas mightily ashamed at this mischance, so that we could hardly perswade her to be seen by any body; but the boy was as well pleased, as she was troubled; it was honey and nuts to him to tell the guests, how the Cook-maid could do some seats of activity, as well as he, and then relate to them, in what posture he found her. Much sport was made upon this account; and although the Wench was shy at first in being seen, yet in time she bore it out bravely, when the guests gave her money to talk with her about this Adventure.

By this means the wench became a great Enemy to the boy, and did him many shrew'd turns, but durst not meddle with his body politick, dreading the danger fhe should run into by the harmes of others who had been his perfecutors; wherefore the was forced to let him alone as to matter of action, only now and then she would exercise her wit upon him, in which fhe feldome came off but with the disadvantage. She was famous for this her trick of activity, by which she got money, but much more by another, which fhe foon after effected, and came more clearly off with it: It was then in time of rebellion, and all observations of Christmas, Easter, Whitsoutide, or any Holy-days, were by the Factious accounted fuperstitious, especially any observation of Christmas; and therefore, the more to cross the desire and humour of those who would observe the feast of Christmas, the men then in power commanded a strict fast to be on that day kept and observed, with penalties on all those who should dress any victuals; and althorough the Town, and especially our house, was of another per-fwation, yet such was the prevalency of the Faction, that it, was ftrictly observed; & it was given out that the Officers of the Town would search houses, to find and punish Offenders. Our Cook-maid hearing of this, was refolved to put a trick upon the Officers; who about the middle of Sermon time came attended with a Guard, to fee and examine our Kitching, where they found not the Jack a going, yet they found a good fire, and the pot a boyling: How now, faid Mafter Church warden, How dare you break the Lawes, by dressing victuals on this day? What have you in the Pot? Ouoth the Maid, Nothing but plumb porridg? How, faid the Church-warden, Superflitious Porridg? this is a very great offence, and descrees as great punishment, to do thus in contempt of the Laws; I will see your Master fined for this, and severely punished. Well, replyed the, but I pray, Mafter Church-warden, be not foangry, but be facified; which I know you will be, when you fee further what is in the Pot, and with what the porridgearemade; and left you should mistake I will show you; whereupon the went to the Pot and took out a large pair of Rams-horns, and faid, Look you, Mafter Church-warden, this is the meat; howelike youit! I hope fo well, that you will taft of the broath your felf without feruple of confeience? The case was so plain, and Mafter-Church-warden was fo fentible that he was jeer'd, that he made all possible haste out of the house, threatning what he would do to the Wench, who now only laughed at him, as did fome of his attendants, who knew the Church-warden was very fenfible of the affront, his wife being one of those who wore cork-heeld thoes, which made her pass for a light Huswife, as indeed the was. H 4

This trick which our Maid put upon the Churchwarden, raifed agreat noife in the Town and Country, and brought all the Cavileers to our house, who gave her somewhat to her box, so that she was very happy in this project, and our Host had very great Custom.

But ftill the Boy and Wench could not agree to fet their horfes together; for his business was to be up in the morning with the first, and help her make her fire, this he could not indure, for he loved his bed mightily well, and would rather want his belly full of victuals, then sleep, he had liberty to lye a bed on a Sunday so long as he pleased, because then they had sew guests; wherefore he would constantly lye by it, till dinner time, which he knew by the jack going; for so long as the jack went, so long would he lie by it, but when that was stopt, he thought it was time, to rife to dinner.

The wench observing that he observed this Custome was refolved to put a trick on him, and therefore one Sunday though dinner was dreffed by twelve a clock, and eaten by one, yet she let the Jack go on till four a Clock after-noon, still the boy lay listning to the Jacks going; and hearing that goftill on, gave himfelf to lazyness, and took many a sweet turn, which she laughed at heartily; at length fhe ftopt the Jack, and immediately the boy arose, and came down stairs (for he lay in a finall loft over the Kitchin) to fee what was become of the roaft; but he found none in the Kitchin, nor Hall, nor no body in the house but the wench; who feeing him fearch about for his Dinner, and asking her questions about the affairs of the belly, fhe could not answer him for laughing; but foon after the family returning from Church, he discovered his own miftake, and her roguery; for this, he refolved on a revenge, which he had upon her the next day, when, a confiderable dinner being to be dreffed, he was called up in the morning to make a fire; he did fo, and was more than ordinarily diligent, for he laid a row of Cinders, then fresh Coals, then a row of gun powder, then a row of Cinders, then more gun-powder, and fo Cinders, till this pile of building was erected; that done, he flightly kindled it and departed. going on an errand out of the Town. The Wench not knowing, or diftrufting the intended mischief, hung on her l'ot; and both the Spits of Geefe, Capons, and other Fowls; but before they were a quarter roafted, the train of Powder took; with that up flew the Pot; and both the Spits, with all the Fowl, took a fecond flight; the Wench was amazed, and the Dinner spoiled, for the ashes and Cinders had made all the Fowls of a fad colour: fo that the Wench flamped and fwore, as if fhe had been bewitch'd.

CHAP. IX.

The Maid is out-witted by a Country Fellow in an eateing wager, and so is her Master, mine Host; who makes himself whole again by another eating wager. Three Women drink off eighteen Gallons of Rhenish Wine at one sitting, and the manner how.

M R.S. Dorothy paufing, and we laughing, gave her the conveniency to confider of what she was to say further; wherefore in short time she thus proceeded.

The poor Wench was at a great lofs, to think that the Guests must loose their dinner; and she could not for a long time think how this came about, nor diftrust that the boy had been concerned in it; but at length, the mist being removed, hereyes were opened, and she believed the boy to be the Authour of this mischies. But since it was done, and what was past could not be prevented or helped; fhe bethought her felf how to proceed; and therefore, her Miftress coming into the Kitchin, and feeing the state of the matter, they likewife called me and the Daughter, to affift in the remedy; whilst the Wench made the fire good, we fell to washing the Fowls from the fowleness which the Cinders and Ashes had caused: but when that was done, we had a further and more tedious work, to pick out feveral corns of powder that were fastned into the skins of the Fowls; at length, with many hands, we likewife performed this work, and with an hours lofs, the Dinner was in as much forwardness as it had been; and at length, it was dressed and eaten; but the Guefts tafting, and feeing fome remains of the Gun-powder, my Host excused it well enough, by telling them that those Fowles were shot by an accident.

Thus was the Dinner eaten, and much Wine drank off before the boy returned; but fo foon as he came in, mine Host took him by the hand, and led him into the room where the Guests were still a drinking: and first desireing silence, and then their pardon, he told them this was the Gunner, that had shot all those Fowls they had eaten, at one shot; how, said they, he is an excellent marks-man: yes truly, said mine Host, but he had a strange kind of instrument to do this Execution; and I pray, Gentlemen, do you examine him how it was done.

The Guefts thinking there was fomewhat in the matter that was pleafant, defired the boy to acquaint them with it; he feeing how matters went, and believing no harm would come to him, in plain terms told them all; they were ftrangely pleafed with the boyes difcourfe; and he having told them the manner how he did it, they defired to know the caufe, wherefore; to this he replyed, it was becaufe the maid had cheated him of his Dinner, by letting the Jack to go, as I told you.

The rehearfal of that Adventure pleafed them as much as the other; and the maid was call'd in, who confessing all that the boy had told them, the Guests made them Friends, and gave money to each of them; advising the Wench not by any means to fall out with the boy, and fo they difmiffed them.

Thus had we much pleafure by Adventures, which every day fell out between this boy and some body or other, but I will leave that, to tell you of fomewhat elfe, as confiderable and pleafant. Our Cook-maid, though fhe were pretty cunning and witty; was yet fometimes out-witted; for one day, an ordinary Country fellow came into the Kitchin; and calling for a Flaggon of beer, fate down by the fire to drink it and thus he began with the Wench: Here is good drink at your house, but I wonder you are not as well provided with Victuals; why, faid the, fo we are, for here is good meat at the fire, thewing him a piece of roaft beef, that weighed above a flone; yes, faid he again, the meat may be good, but there is but a little of it, there is enough for you, replyed she; no, but there is not, faid he; how, faid the, can you eat all this? Yes, that I can, faid he; I'le lay a wager of that, faid the; what you dare, faid the man, the would have the wager be a quart of wine (for the was refolved against money wagers) nay, said the Man, a pint is enough for me with this meat, and fo much will I lay: She thinking, that the less she layd the less she fhould lofe, if the loft, and being very defirous to fee this great wager of eating performed, agreed to his Terms, and thereupon he fell too lustily, and did eat confiderably, but far fhort of all, fo that he confented his wager to be loft, and the pint of wine was called for; he feizing on it first, put it to his nose, and drank all off; and throwing down fix pence for his pint of wine, and two pence for his pot of beer, was departing, when her Miftress, mine Hostess, enters the Kitchin. and feeing the fellow departing, asked who must pay for the meat? Not I, faid the fellow; Nor I, faid the wench, so that a controversie arose between them; but mine Host and some company coming in, ended it, by ajudging, that fince the Country-man called for no meat, it was not fit he should pay for it, and he not paying, the maid must, which she presently did it, but was laughed at for her folly. But she was not the only over-reach'd person in the house, for it was not long ere mine Hoft himfelf was finely caught.

There came three men, who although they were neighbours, and famous for eating, yet mine Hoft not knowing them, they thus over-reach'd him: they came to fup, and lye there that night, and therefore went into the Kitchin to fee what was for Supper. There was Capons, Pidgeons, and Sparagus: Very good meat, faid they: Now, mine Hoft, what shall we give you a peice for our supper of these three forts of victuals? He asked, how much they would have drest: they asked him the same question, How much he would dress: Why, said he, I will dress three Capons, three dozen of Pidgeons, and fifteen hundred of Sparagus. Very good, faid they: but if this be not enough, we expect to have more. That you shall, faid he; but you shall sup first, and I hope there will be enough for my felf and family, when you have done. For that, you must adventure it, said they; Well now, your price? Said mine Hoft, I will have three shillings four pence a piece, that is, ten shillings in all. Content, faid they; Make hafte that we may drink afterwards. Thus was the Bargain made up, and the Fowls laid down to the fire. In the mean time the three Travellors fetched a walk, to get them (as they faid) a ftomack to their Supper; which in convenient time being ready, and they returned, they thus began; each of the three took, each of them, a Capon whole on their trenchers; and cutting them into pieces, they made one mouthful of each wing, another of each leg; and feraping all the meat from the Carcaís, into two or three mouth-fuls, the Capons were invifible; then they drank each his cup of Claret, to whet their appetites; that being done, they fell to the Pidgeons, and cutting each Pidgeon into four quarters, they eat them, bones and all, at four bits; and then they drank again, and fell to the Sparagus, which was in fhort time beflowed where the reft of the victuals was; mine Hoft feeing them fo quick at their work, flared at them, and they calling for another glass of wine drank to him, and told him, that he must provide more victuals, or lofe his wager, he being angry at both their propositions, at length thought it was better to let them have more meat, than not to be paid for what they had, and be laughed at into the Bargain; wherefore he replyed, they should have enough; and calling for the Cook-maid, commanded her to dress the same quantity of victuals; she staring on the Guefts, they bad her go down, and make hafte for they wanted their fupper: down fhe went, and did accordingly; and whilft fupper was dreffing, they walked and fmoak'd, in their Chamber. In time the other courfe, confifting of three Capons, three dozen of Pigeons, and fifteen hundred of Sparagus was brought up, and in as little time as before it was eaten up, as the former had been to the great cost, loss, and confusion of mine Host; who stared now worse than he had done; but however he again asked them, if they would have any more; to this they readily replyed, Yes. He again called, and the Cook maid being come up, was commanded to drefs the fame quantity again, and that quickly: She replyed, she could not, for all the Fowl that was killed, was eaten; and it would be a great while, ere she could kill, pull and drefs the like quantity; befides, there was no more Sparagus then to be had; they told mine Hoft they must have their bargain, or he lose his wager: he replyed, if he could not furnish them with that, yet they might have of any other fort of victuals: they faid, they would have that, or none, or elfe a third way, come to composition, to this mine Host gave ear, and asked what composition: they told him, that indeed though they could give a dispatch to more victuals, yet they would for once forbear further eating, and exchange their victuals for drink: fo they reckoned what their other mefsof victuals might come to, which being computed to ten shillings, they defired ten shillings worth of wine. Mine Hoft shook his head at this and faid, they did him too hard, which they confeffing, and a little further discoursing on, it was agreed that they should have each of them a quart of Canary, in full fatisfaction of the wager: this they had, this they drank off, and fo went to bed, where they flept more foundly then mine Hoft, who with all his Family went supperless to bed; and he was extreamly vex'd, that he should be out-witted and overreached by three Bumpkins; but what could not be cured must be endured; it was but a folly to complain, felf do, felf have, and now he remember'd the wager between the Cook-maid and Country-man, and had no cause to laugh at her any more. Night being spent, part in fleep, and part in these cogitations, he arose, and fo did his guests, who honestly paid their shot, though not half fo much as their reckoning came to: and at departure they told him, that if ever he had occasion for an eating wager, if he would fend for any of them, they would do their weak endeavours to affift him as much to his gain as this had been to his loss; and thereupon acquainted him with the places of their dwellings, they departed: and indeed, it was not long ere he had occasion to make use of them; for a Person of Quality, being to travel our Road, fent his boy before to our house to bespeak a Supper; the boy, having miftook his Mafter in his direction, inflead of a couple of Capons, and a dozen of Larks, which he had ordered him to befpeak, he befpeak, a dozen of Capons, and a Couple of Larks, mine Hoft did fomewhat diftrust the boy for his directions, when he spake of a couple of Larks, and told him furely he was miftaken, he must have two dozen of Larks; no, faid the boy, my Mafter is but a finall eater, and the dozen of Capons and the two Larkswill beenough for him and his Company, which is but one Gentleman, befides himfelf; well, replyed mine Hoft, however I'le provide two dozen of Larks; and if your Mafter will not eat them. I'le have them my felf; to this the boy confented, and the fowls were ordered to be dreffed accordingly: mine Hoft

was very fenfible of the miftake, and that the Boy should have bespoke but two Capons, and a dozen of Larks; but however, the boy being fo confident that it was a dozen of Capons, he was refolved to drefs them, and that his Mafter should pay for them; but left they should be left on his hands, and deducted for, he bethought on a way to have them dispatched; wherefore he dispatched away a boy to one of his three Capon and Pidgeon eaters, defiring him to favour him fo far, as to come that evening to his house; for he did believe he might do him a kindnessin some affairs relating to the teeth and guts. The Country man was at home, and came at his time: but before he came, the Mafter of the boy came thither, and asking what was for Supper, was answered, a dozen of Capons, and two dozen of Larks; and for whom is all this provision? faid the Gentleman. For your worship, said mine Host: how fo, faid the Gentleman, by whose order? by your fervants, replyed mine Hoft; and thereupon the boy being called, firrah, faid his Mafter, what orders did I give you about my fupper? Sir, faid the boy, I believe there is a miftake, and fo I told mine Hoft. For I only befpake a dozen of Capons, and a couple of Larks; and he faid, it was too little, and that he would drefs two dozen of Larks. The Gentleman and his Friend laughedatthe Boyes miftake, and excuse; and mine Hoft faid, that he thought two dozen of Larks was little enough for one dozen of Capons. That is true, faid the Gentleman; but I ordered the boy to befpeak only a couple of Capons, and a dozen of Larks. You fee faid mine Hoft, It is not my mistake, and I did nothing but was reasonable. I but, said the Gentleman, it is unreasonable to think, that we two and the boy can eat fo much as you have provided for us;

not fo unreasonable neither, as you think, Sir, replyed mine Host; for I'le lay a good wager, that I'le produce one man, that can, and will eat up all the Capons himfelf; how, faid the Gentleman? I'le never believe that, and I'le lay twenty shillings of it, and venture my Supper; done, faid mine Hoft; done, faid the Gentleman; and fo both their moneys were laid into the other Gentlemans hand. Thus was this wager concluded of and mine Hoft went to his Teeth and Gut-Champion, who attended the fport; he told him the wager; to that he shook his head, and said it was a hard task; but he would strive to serve him. Supper being ready, it was Ushered in by mine Host, leading his Champion by the hand; who, after due reverance to the Company, fits down; and the meat being placed on the board, the wager was again recited; and it was furtheragreed, that the Champion might have what drink he would call for; and thereupon he began to use his teeth, and the rest of the Company their eyes, to behold the manner how he made fo quick a dispatch of his Victuals. I told you already how, and in that manner he did eat; but now being to do much, he took more time than ordinary; but in time, ten of the twelve were made invifible, being put into our Gutmongers Christmas Cup-board, and the eleventh was on his Trencher, and part of it fent down his belly, when mine Hoft looked on him with a more than curious eye, and difcovered fomewhat of difcontent, which caused him to cry out, Come Friend! bear up, and here's to you; thank you, replyed the Eater; and taking the drink from mine Hoft, he whifpering him in the ear, faid; You have loft, I can eat no more. How, faid the Gentleman, what fayes he? Nothing, faid mine Hoft, but that he is fure you have loft, for he can eat a dozen more: How, replyed the Gentle-man, but by my faith he shall not, for i'le have this my felf for my Supper: and thereupon he seized on the twelfth Capon, and laying it on his Trencher, cuts it in peices, and gives to his Friend. Nay then, said mine Host, I see you agree the wager to be mine: yes, replyed the Gentleman, I had better do so, than fill his belly, and lose my own supper; and thereupon the money was given to mine Host; who now, meerly by his quickness of wit in thinking, and confidence in speaking so contrary to the Eaters saying, won the wager; and, which was most, saving his own credit, and that of his Champion, who clearly confessed, that the wager was in great danger to be lost.

Thus did mine Host get as much as he lost by the former wager, and the Gentleman was well pleased at the loss of his; and all parties being contented, they went to bed, and next day parted.

And now, continued Mrs. Dorothy, that my hand is in, I'le tell you one Story more of the like nature, and fo conclude with this eating discourse.

It was not long ere fome Company came to the House, and in the Company three Women, who were good girls, absolute Bona Roba's, they had a great desire to drink Rhenish wine, and therefore asked if we had any? Mine Host told them yes, he had a Runlet of eighteen Gallons newly come in, and it was excellent good; the women said that would hardly serve one sitting: no said one of the Gentle-men surely it will: they said no, they would wager that they themselves could drink it off at one sitting. The Gentleman told them that if they would, he would not only pay for it, but also give unto each of them forty shillings, to buy a new Petticoat; this they agreed to, nay, they said they would not rife from their seats e're it was done, provided they might have Anchoves, and Neats-tongues, and fuch like victuals to intermix: this was agreed on, and that they might the more conveniently do their business, they had each of them an empty Butter-firkin with the head knock'd off, and fo taking up their Coates, they laid their bare bums on the firkins, thus they fate, and thus they drank, fometimes eating and other whiles talking, fo that in four hours time, all the wine was drank off, and if they had occasion to evacuate, they did that without trouble fitting as they did on butter-firkins.

CHAP. X.

Mrs. Dorothy discourses of the several cheats of Drawers and Tappers, inventing bad drink and small measure. The Host carries two men before the Justice, where he came off with the loss. He is outwitted by two Guefts, but is revenged on them by the boves affiftance.

These were the frolicks we daily had at our house, which were commonly to the profit of mine Hoft; for whoever won or loft he went away with the profit and gain; and indeed his gain was very great both in his victuals and drink, for when wine was to be fold at eighteen pence the quart, we had two shillings or half a crown, and that we might not come within the compass of the law, to every bottle of Wine, a finall plate of Olives was carried up, neither was this enough to have the price, but the Wine was generally mixt, and bad; and that the Guests might as well be cheated in quantity as quality, it was commonly fold in bottles, where we many times had two shillings or half a crown for a bottle of Wine that would not hold above a pinte and a half; and for instance, I will relate one little fine Cheat to that purpofe: A Company of Gentlemen come to our house and call'd for Wine, which they drank off but liked not, wherefore they called the Drawer, and defiring another bottle told him that there was two faults in the Wine they had drank, the one that it was not fogood as they expected, the other, that the bottle was not full measure; they therefore defired him to mend both the quality and quantity in the next, fince they intended him, and always gave the best price, half a crown a bottle, he promised an amendment as to both, and fowent down, and indeed was as good as his word, drawing the best wine in the Cellar, and that in a Bottleofthe largest size; they thanked him and for his encouragement to continue honest to them they gave him ashilling, he pocketed the money and left them, they drank on and finding their wine good, called for more, which they had: But mark the falfnefs and ingratitude of this rafcally Drawer, he in fhort time first changed their wine, and gave them worfe, and not contented with that likewife cheated them of their measure, he carried a bottle of wine and filled a glass out of it, when one of the Gentlemen who was not yet fo dim fighted but he could fee fomewhat of the intended cheat, cry'd hold Drawer, let me fee that Glass and Bottle, and thereupon poured the wine into the bottle which was indifferent full but looking on the bottle, and feeing it was very fmall, he faid: furely this Bottle does not hold a full quart, Oh Lord! Sir, faid the Drawer, do you think I would wrong you? I do not know; replyed the Gentleman, but I much diftrust it, you have no cause replyed the Drawer, for I am fure that bottle is full meafure, what will you wager of that faid the Gentleman? any thing you will, faid the Drawer: But do you think I would put any tricks upon Gentlemen I have so great respect for, no furely? But faid the Gentleman I must and will be fatisfied, that you may quickly be, replyed the Drawer, for I will fetch a new fealed quart pot and measure it, this was agreed upon, and in fhort time up comes the Drawer with a quart pot in his hand, being come to the Table he takes the bottle and pours the wine out of that into the quart pot, which when looked upon was full as it ought to be, now faid one to the Gentleman who complained, you have wronged the honest Drawer and must give him satisfaction for the abuse, truly replyed he, I was very much mistaken, and my mind still gives me that there is some cunning trick and cheat in this contrivance, and that it is not as it appears to be; truly replyed the Drawer, if you think I have done you any abuse you do me wrong, and besides the great respect I have for you who are my Masters best Customers, I know if I should attempt to wrong you. my Mafter would be much troubled and would not keep a Servant in his House that should do it; well for all this replyed the Gentleman, I pray let me fee the bottle and quart pot, the Drawer delivered him the quart pot freely, but parted from the bottle with much unwillingness, but in fine the Gentleman had them both when prefently he takes the quart pot and out of that filled the bottle, and then he found the Cheat, which was this; there was more than half a pint of wine left in the quart pot, how now, faid the Gentleman who is wronged now, where lies the Cheat? The Drawer feeing himfelf found out and fearing hefhould be beaten

replyed, I do not know, and fo turn'd his back and left them; great was the admiration of the whole company, of the management of this cheat, but much more at the impudence of the Drawer; now they all perceived that the Drawer when he went down into the Cellar to bring upaquart pot, brought wine in it, and that above half a pint, the acting of the thing it felf was not fo much as the manner, that this knavish Drawer should be so impudent as to stand in it, and justifie it with language, when as if he had not been too confident, and fo foon as he had put the wine into a quart pot had immediately gone away, he might have escaped undiscovered; butitwas his fortune so to be found out to the great admiration of the whole company, who although they found themselves cheated, yet were hugely pleafed with the manner, and made it their discourse in all Taverns they came into for a long time after; but I believe it was to as little purpose with others, as with our folks, for when any fuch tricks or cheats have been told in our house, our people would only give them the hearing, and feem to be aftonished with the discourse, but be never a whit the better for it, but immediately upon the next opportunity do the fame thing or as bad, and this was their constant practice; they would draw wine in glass bottles that were fo thick at the bottom that when they were empty they were as heavy as if they were half full, and also batter'd pots that would not hold out measure, and sometimes would fill a pot not above three quarters full, and when the Drawer brought it in, he would prefently fill out a glass, and stare them in the face as Juglers downen they are about their Hocus Pocus, flight of hand tricks, and fo carry it off, and out of pretence to civility to fill the first glasses they would do it, but their end was quite different, it being only to deceive them and to hinder them from feeing the false measure that is brought them, which cannot be discovered when a glass or two is filled out.

Mine Host was finely caught one day with a pot not being filled: Two Old Country men coming to our house in a morning called for a quart of wine, the Drawer believing they were to be choused, brought up a quart pot, but it was little more than half full. he intended they should have it raw, but it being a cold morning, they bad him rost it, that is put it to the fire and burn it; he was now at a lofs in not filling out the first glass, but not knowing how to help it, he did fet it down before the fire, and I suppose, he intended to fill it up afterwards, but he forgetting that, and the old men being bufic indifcourfe forgottolook to it, when on a fudden they look'd, and the pot was melted almost half way down, which was as far as there was no wine in it; with that the maid feeing it call'd out to them, what honest men do you melt your pot? Not we, faid they, it is the fire, but you are like to pay for it, replyed the wench, that is when we do, faid they, at this mine Hoft came up, the maid tells how that these two old men had been telling their Canterbury tales fo long that the pot was melted, then they must pay for it said mine Host, for it was given to their charge; thereupon the Drawer was call'd, who likewife averred that he gave them the pot with the wine into their charge and cuftody, and that therefore they ought to look after it, and fince it was damag'd to pay for it. They replyed, they took no charge of it, neither did they touch it, but only ordered him, to burn it well: mine Hoft faid they should pay, and they faid they would not, whereupon he threatened them with a Justices Warrant; they were fomewhat unwilling to be troubled, and were content to pay for the wine, and allow fix pence more for mending the pot, mine Hoft replying that would not do, for it could not be mended, and he must have a new one; they seeing him fo unreasonable, were content the Justice should decide the Controversie; wherefore before the Justice they went, and mine Host there made his Complaint that those two men had melted his quart pot. and refused to pay for it. The Justice perceiving where the matter lay, and that he told his tale wrong. defired the men to fpeak, who in plain terms told him they took no charge of the pot, but onely defired the Drawer to cause Wine to be burnt, that he had accordingly fet it down by the fire, and without their handling or touching it, the pot was melted. So, faid the Justice, and did neither of you drink of the Wine? No. not one drop, replyed the old men, and yet we offered to pay for the Wine, and give fixpence towards mending the pot. This is more than you shall need to do. faid the Justice, & then he thus proceeded to mine Host.

Friend, with what confidence can you demand any money of these men that had nothing of you? fince you would not do them justice, I will; I do hereby acquit them from paying any thing for Wine, becaufe they never had any; and for the melting the pot, how did they do it? It was not they, but your fervant who drew the Wine, who had he filled the pot full of wine. the Fire could not have melted it; for I very well understand that the pot was melted no further than it was empty: And further, continued the Justice, this shall not ferve your turn, for I shall Fine you for not filling your pot; Your Crime is very apparent and evident, and fo shall your punishment be, and I order you. as a Fine, to pay down Twenty shillings for your mifdemeanor, or elfe I shall make your Mittimus, and fend you to Prison. Thus was the Case altered, and the Tale was now of another Hog; for mine Hoft who expected satisfaction, was forced to give it, and that im-mediatly, or elfe go to Prifon.

This went against the hair, but Necessity hath no Law, and therefore down he paid the money, and came home heartily vexed, not fo much for the money he had paid, as for the difgrace he received; for he was now become the Town-talk: But however, fince he could not help the difgrace, he was forced to be contented with that; but for his lofs, he foon fetch'd it up either in false measures, Over-reckonings, or some fuch practifes as I have told you. And besides these extraordinary gains he made by Drink, he had his ways to cheat in Victuals, he would reckon for a Dish of anchoves that stood him in ten pence, or a shilling, two thillings or half a Crown at the least; and carry them in a large Dish an inch afunder from one another. Whestphalia Ham of Bacon he would cut so thin, and make fuch a large flow of a little meat, that he would reckon two shillings for that which stood him in two groats; nay, and fometimes be paid fix pence for fouling of Linnen to it. A Neats-tongue of two shillings, he would reckon four shillings, or four shillings fix pence for it, nay though they were cheated of part of it, as I remember he was caught in the manner about one. A Neat's-tongue being call'd for, and carried in to the Guefts, but first (as the manner is) it was slit down quite through the middle, and not barely fo. but mine Hoftefsherfelf had gelded it, and cut off from each fide a fine largeflice, which fhe intended for fome other Gentlemen in the House, to draw down th'other Bottle of wine. This Neats-tongue being carried to the Guefts, one of them complained of the cutting it, faying, he had rather have had it whole; for (faid he) there is less loss in cutting it in flices crofs-ways than this. Why (faid another) you may do fo still, and thereupon he took the Tongue and clapt it together again, but it would not come close by above half an inch; and they discovered the place, where it had been pared, to look wide like a mouth: they perceiving the cheat, were refolv'd to try a little farther experiment, and therefore called in for mine Host, who with a Sit you merry Gentlemen came in: Landlord (faid one) I pray what do you reckon for this Neats-Tongue? Not above four shillings, or four fhillings fixpence, faid he: I but that is too much reply'd the man, this is but a little one, and I think not a whole one. How! reply'd mine Host, not a whole one! that were a good jest indeed; I say tis a whole one, and a large one too. I'le wager a quart of Sack (faid the Gentleman) that you are mistaken; Done, faid mine Hoft: whereupon the Neats-Tongue was clapt together, and mine Hoft quickly faw that he had loft; he began to flounce and flufter, faying, that fome of the company had done it; but leaving the Room, and going to his wife in the Kitchin, he foon found that he had loft indeed: the company being good guefts to the house he was unwilling to displease them; wherefore he drew a quart of wine, went in and acknowledged his error, and paid for it, excufing the matter as well as he could, and they took all in good part. Thus was he fometimes caught, and paid for it; but not once in twenty times but he caught his guests, and made them pay for it. They would not only cheat their guefts, but their own fervants bellies; for except they had good trading, that the Servants might feed on the reversione of their guests dinners, they were like to go without, or at least have a poor one: the was very niggardly, and when they had falt fish, which was commonly once a week, she would allow them neither Oyl nor Butter, but only Mustard, but she was broken of that custom in this manner; after they had one day din'd with fish, drest as I tell you, down stairs went one fervant, then another, and fo one after another they all dropt away and went into the Cellar; where when they were come, the Drawer faid, now to our old Custom, that is, fince we have had no ovl nor butter, to our fish, we will foak it in fack, my friends, and that of the best, every one his half pint, and fo away to our bufiness: mine Host having some business with some of the fervants, and finding them all miffing, went to the Cellar door, and there he not only heard this proposition made by the Drawer, but faw it also confirmed and executed; whereupon he went to his wife, and commanded her for the future to allow his fervants not onely ovl with their mustard to their falt fish, but butter and eggs too if they would have it, and fo they had for the future. I have known mine Host sell and take money for one Joynt of meat twice, in this manner: when a Feast hath been above ftairs, Joynts of Meat, and Fowles that have hardly been touched, have been brought down and fold to guests below, as fresh brought from the fire, at a very good rate: indeed no opportunity hath been omitted, to gain money. There was a pretty passage hapned about a couple of guefts, that upon occasion lay there two or three nights together; thus it was: two men came one night to lodge, and being not well in health, it having been cold and rainy, they defired a good fire in their Chamber, which they had without any fupper, or any drink, but a quart of burnt wine, and fo they went to bed: the next day proving cold and rainy and their business not being very urgent, they continued there, and kept their Chamber, with little victuals, and as little drink; but however they kept a good fire, and mine Hoft feeing they had little elfe but fireing, was refolved he would get fufficiently by that,

and therefore the next morning when they call'd to know what was to pay, he reckoned them ten shillings for fireing for two nights and one day: this demand they thought was very unreasonable, but, they knew that they could not help themselves, for he would have what he demanded; and besides, to say truth, siring was very scarce and dear in that Country: the two Travellers paid their shot, and intended to leave the house, but the weather proved so cold and stormy, they could not; wherefore they were forced to ftay; but they resolved withall to be better Husbands of their fireing than they had been, but could not tell how, till in the end looking about the house they faw a great old fashion'd Bed-stead, that lay useless in a Hole: they not telling for what use, asked my Landlord the price of it, who not dreaming of their purpose, in few words fold it to them for five shillings; when they had bought it, they hired a fellow for one fhilling to cutit in pieces fit for fireing; and now being furnished with fewel, they resolved to keep a good fire which they did, and calling for mine Hoft, and a quart of wine, bad him welcome to their good Husbandry; for the wood they had bought of the bedftead was as much agen as they had paid ten shillings for, wherefore they made a good fire, and fung old rose in the gun-room. Mine Host being thus beaten at his own weapons, and his own Goods by himfelf fold to his lofs, was fomewhat netled, and difcovered his anger to his fervants. Mafter (faid the unhappy boy) if you please I'le be revenged of them: do if you can (faid the Master) not doing mischief. The boy having a commission, was not long e're he put it in execution; for joyning another Servant in confederacy with him, they went that evening to wait on the two guests, when among other matters they talked of spirits and apparitions; quoth the boy, we are often troubled with them here, and especially in this Chamber: I am forry for that (faid one of our Travellers) for I am very fearful of any fuch things: and thus the boy poffed them with fear of that which he intended and executed; for about midnight heand his confederate took a Calf out of the Cow-house, and tying his four legs together, but so as he might not only stand, but go a little; they put him into our Travellers chamber, and there waited the event; it was not long e're the Calf began to pace it about the Room, making an unufual noise: and in this manner he continued staming till both our Travellers were awake, who hearing the noife, were possessed with fear and astonishment, supposing it to be a spirit that was told them of: thereupon they shrunk close into the bed for fear; the noise continuing, and no harm or danger coming to them, at length one of them confented to rife and light a candle to fee what was the matter; a candle was found, and fome remains of fire being still in the chimney, thither he went: and flooping down fell a blowing with his mouth to light the candle, the Calf feeing a light, went thitherwards, and efpying fomewhat that was pendulous between the Travellers Legs, and taking it to be his Mother Cows Teat, thruft his chaps thitherwards, and feizing it in his mouth, fell full luftily to fucking, the Traveller perceiving himfelf caught by the Members, and not knowing by what, and being in fear of lofing them, fell a roaring very loud, to the great forrow and grief of his bed-fellow, and as great joy of our unhappy Boy and his Confederate.

CHAP. XI.

Six Country Blades steal a Goose and two Hens; by the contrivance of two of them and the Host; the other four pay soundly forthem, and laugh at their Companions. A Traveller by a mistake lies with another mans Wife. A noise of Fidlers are forced to pay for their sawiness.

The poor Traveller, who was thus used by the Calf, still continued his roaring out, and the Calf being hungry, did fuck very hard, but to no purpofe, our young Crack-rope and his Companion still listening and laughing: but in fine, the noise continuing, and they doubting that there was more than fport, they entered the Chamber, where they faw the Calf close to the Traveller, but could not tell what he did there; but the Traveller still making a noise, they came near, and perceiving the Calfs miftake; they thrust somewhat into his mouth, and thereby difingaged him from the Travellers Bawble: He still lay on the Ground whilft they carried the Calf out of the Chamber, foon returning with a lighted Candle to fee what was the matter: the Traveller was by that time fomewhat come to himfelf, and feeling that he had loft nothing, was indifferently fatisfied: they being now entered the Chamber, asked what was the matter? and wherefore he made fo much noise? he now looking about the Chamber, and feeing nothing but People with a light, whom he knew, could not well tell what answer to give, only he told them, that the Devil, or fome wicked Spirit had been there, and he had like to have been mischiev'd by him, but that now he found himfelf well again: his Fellow-Traveller likewife faid that there had been fome walking in the Chamber, but what it was, and wherefore his Companion roared out, he knew not: in fine, they who had done the mischief were thanked for their readiness to come and affift them; and so with some perfwations our Traveller went to bed again, where he lay till the next morning, although he flept not, fo great was his fear of the foul Fiend; but fo foon as morning came they both arose, and though the weather still continued cold and rainy, yet they could not be perswaded to stay any longer in our Inn, but paying their reckoning left it, and half their wood behind them; fo that mine Hoft was now no loofer by this bargain, it being ready cleft to fell to the next cold Guest that should arrive there.

The last passage hapned in the Winter time, a little before Christmas, which foon after coming, we had two or three notable Accidents that befel in our Inn; the first was this: half a dozen of young Country Blades had been abroad a Fowling, or a Fooling rather, and among other purchase that they had, they coming near a Farm-house where there was store of Poultry, at two flots which they made, they kill'd two Hens and a Goofe: this with the rest of their Game they brought to our house to be dressed against the next day for dinner: they drank some bottles of wine when they brought them, and being merry (faid one) we will to morrow drink a health to the owner of the Hens and Geefe: well, that we will (faid another,) but I would not for forty shillings that he thould know of it, for if he did, I doubt he would make us pay fawce: and truly I am vet fomewhat fearful that we shall be discovered: so am I, said another, and so a third; well, if we be found out we can pay for them, and my share shall be ready. This was their discourse, and so for that time they parted; but it was not long ere two of the Company returned, and calling for a bottle of wine fell heartily a laughing; and (fayes the one to the other) I am refolved it shall be fo, and with the affiftance of mine Hoft we may carry the matter very closely; and thereupon mine Hoft was call'd for: he being come, they told him that they must have his affistance in a design, which he promifed should not be wanting, and thereupon one of them thus began: mine Host, we have this day, as you know, been a Fowling, and part of what we brought in we plunder'd for, or in plain English, stole; now fome of our Companyare very confcious of their guilt and are not only penitent, but fearful; now it is our defign to increase their fear, and get some money out of them to make us merry; and thus we have contrived it: to morrow when we are towards the latter end of our dinner, I would have you to tell us, that there is a Country fellow, who enquires for fuch perfons as we are, and likewife that he was here as this day to enquire of us, and that he talks of a warrant that he hath against usabout some Poultry his Master lost, and that he suspected us to be guilty; and withal you may add, that he is refolved to have the Law against us, and that you have had much adoe to perfwade him to be patient till we had din'd. Mine Hoft having heard the instructions, was no Fool, but foon understood them, and procur'd a Country Fellow to manage the business fo well, that they should be all startled, only (faid he) you shall allow him half a Crown for his labor, and the rest that he gets of you (for I know you intend a Composition) shall be justly return'd you. Thus was this Affair agreed on, and accordingly the next day managed: for the Guefts also came at the hour appointed, and merrily drank about till Dinner was brought in; which being come they fell to eating, and the Goose being well nigh eaten, a Glass of Wine was call'd for to drink a Health to the Owner, and mine Hoft himfelf was then call'd for up to make one in the Frolick: he being come, and feeing whereabouts Caufes went, thought it now a fit time to begin, and therefore he thus befpeaks the Company: Gentlemen, I understand your Health, and shall willingly drink it, but if I be not mistaken, you will have but little cause to be fo merry on this occasion: why? what's the matter, fays one? what's the matter, faid another? I'le tell you prefently, reply'd mine Hoft, but first let us drink; whereupon up went his Glass, and down Gutter-lane went the Wine, and mine Hoft being grave in his Countenance, and flow in his Speech, they all, as amazed, ftar'd either on him or one another, wondring what should be the meaning of mine Host's Speech: At length he fpake, and acquainted them with the bufinefs, just as he and two of the Company had agreed on; then having done, added farther, That he had endeavoured to underfeel the Fellow that was below, but he found him very obstinate, and doubted very much that he woad make no end but what the Lawfhould: How! (faid one) is your fooling come to this! Oh Lord! (faid another) we have brought our Hogs to a fair Market: Well (faid a third) but what must we do in this cafe? Truly (faid mine Hoft) if I may advife you, I would have one of you go down to treat with the Fellow, and fee what composition you can draw him to: This was in the end thought to be the bell way, and thereupon one went down with mine Hoft; fo foon as the Country-man faw him (being well instructed in every thing) he cries out, nay, I am sure I am in the right, for though the man hath changed his Clothes, yet that won't ferve his turn: I know you well Sir, faid he, by your hair and beard: What do vou know replyed the guest? why I know, faid the Country-man that you are one of the fix that stolemy Masters two Hens and Goose; I saw you well enough when you did it, and know you all well enough when I fee you again; I follow'd you hither yesterday, & fee you hous'd, and able to fwear before Mr. Justice that you are the persons; and my Master is resolved to profecute you, for he hath loft as much Poultry this winter as is worth five pound, and now we have found you you shall pay for all. How! (faid the Guest) furely you do not mean as you fay; one body may be like another, and you may be mistaken; and besides, if it were fo, that we were the Parties, you mean yet a great deal less than five Pound, which I hope will ferve the turn for two hens and a goofe, which you fay is all you loft. I (faid the fellow) that is all indeed that we loft yesterday, but I tell you five pound will not pay for all my Mafter hath loft within this moneth, and my Master and I both believe you had them all, or else you would not fo readily have found the way into our yard; and therefore I fay, and fo my Mafter fayes, that you shall pay for them. Nay friend, (faid mine Host) I pray let me perfivade you to be more reasonable in your demands; reason me no reasons, (said the fellow) it was unreasonable for them to come and rob my Mafter, and therefore I will not be reasonable; I am fure I shall lofe my share of Goose and other Poultry this Christmas, that I should have had, had not we been robb'd. Nay but come, (faid mine Hoft) let me take up this matter: I fay you shall not, (reply'd the Fellow) the Juftice shall know the matter, and no body else; but if they be your friends, if you will make an end, and pay me the money, I'le be rul'd by you. Whereupon mine Hoft took the Fellow by the Arm, and leading him into a drinking room, faid, come let you and I talk a little further of this matter, and in the mean time, faid he to the Gueft, go you up to your Friends and confer with them about it. How, faid the fellow, you mean to lead me out of the way while they get away from me. No, replyed mine Hoft, I'le pass my word for their appearance. Nay, that matters not much, quoth the fellow; for I have fuch a Warrant in my pocket, as will fetch them again in the Devilsname. Having thus faid, he and mine Hoft went to drink a pot of Ale together, and laugh a while; in the mean time our Guest went up to his companions to relate how things were like to go with the fellow, but he needed not tell them, for they being all concern'd, had liftned at the flairs head to what the Fellow had faid, and therefore knowing in what cafe they were, they all agreed to contribute to the fellows fatisfaction, but they thinking five pounds were too much, grumbled at the demand, but was refolved to give that rather than fail, and have further trouble. One of the two confederates feeing how matters went, and though he was willing to put a trick upon his companions, yet thought five pounds was toogreat a fum toget by waggery, he therefore made a propofal that he would go down to the fellow and mine Hoft and treat with them, and he would warrant to get the business of for a great deal lefs: They were foon content with the propofition, whereupon down he went, and after fome time fpent with mine Hoft and the Country man, he returned, faying, Come, come Friends, draw your moneys, for I have ended the Controversie.

and I hope to your content; we must be Noble-men, a Noble a piece, in all Forty shillings is the sum agreed upon to compound this brabling Business, and herein we are much engaged to mine Host for his civility, who hath much perfwaded the fellow, and indeed the fellow by his perfwafions is brought to be fo civil, that I have promis'd him Half a Crown for himfelf. the Company were all well contented with this Composition, and thereupon readily laid down their money, which one of our Confederates pretended to carry down to the fellow, but he put it up in his own pocket, onely giving him the Half Crownhehad promifed, and ordering half a dozen of Beer more for managing the Affair fo handfomly. And thus was this Adventure ended, and in short time the Company separated, but the two Confederates foon came back again, and fhared ftakes of the moneys, and there they laughed at the easiness and credulity of their Companions, and mine Hoft was as merry as they, and had as much caufe, for if the Proverb be true, Let them laugh that win, he was fure to win most, and therefore might well laugh; for he made them pay fawcily for the Sawces to their Goofe, and in the confusion they were then in, it was no hard matter to mif-reckon them feveral bottles of Wine, and the two Confederates who onely managed this Affair to make sport and not for gain, delivered all their profits, which was 26 s. 8 d. into mine Hofts hands to be fpent two or three days after, when they were to bring more company to laugh at this Adventure, and I remember they then came, and mineHoft knowing they came eafily by their moneys, was refolvedtoput in for a share of it, and so he did, and had it; for they had but three Dishes of Fish, but he again made them pay for their Sawce, reckoning fourteen shillings for that and dressing it, although the Fish it self did cost but half so much; these were his Tricks.

But there was about that time fuch a trick plaid by a miftake, as I have feldom heard of: Several Companies were in the house and lodged there, and it being long nights, much of that tedious time was fpent in Gaming, and higgedly piggedly one with another, all Companies mixt in that pastime; but it growing late, those that were weary and sleepy dropt away to bed: Among the reft, one man who had a very handfome woman to his Wife went to bed, and his Lodging was in a Chamber where there was another Bed; the man being in Bed, laid his wearing Clothes, viz., Doublet, Breeches and Cloak upon him, and putting out the candlewent to fleep; in fhort timeafter, another fingle man who was to lodge in the Bed in the fame Chamber went up, and walking about, a conceit came into his head, that it was probable he might have a Shee-bedfellow, and in order thereto he thus carried his on Defign: He put off his own Clothes, and laid them very orderly on the Bed where the man was afleep, first taking off those of his Chamber-fellows, and when he had done, he very fairly spread them on the Bed he was to lye in; having done this, he went to bed and put out his Candle, expecting the event, which happened to be fo as he hoped and expected; for not long after up came the woman, intending to go to bed to her Husband, undreft herfelf, and feeing and well enough knowing her Husbands clothes, believing that to be a fufficient fign of her Husbands being there, not looking on the face which was purpofely hid, the put out her Candle & went to Bed to the wrong man, who although he pretended then to be affeep, yet he did her right before morning; for the ftill supposing it was her husband, gave him free liberty to do what he would. Her bed-fellow, though he had taken much pains and was weary, yet towards morning confidering that if this matter were discovered, he might have fower Sauce to his fweet Meat, studied and contrived how to come off as well as he had come on, and therefore turning to his Bed-fellow and kiffing her, &c. as a Farewel, he pretended to rife and make water, went out of the Bed; he foon found the way to his Chamber-fellows Beds fide, and there took off his clothes, dreff'd himfelf and departed. The woman missing her Bed-fellow, which she thought had been her Husband, much wondred what was become of him, and lay and studied in great confusion, she knew not what to do or fay, and the began to diftrust that she had a wrong Bedfellow, especially when she consider'd with herself that her Husband was not wont to be fo kinde: when she was partly fenfible of the miftake, the could not tell how to think of a remedy; if the should arise and go into the other Bed, she might chance to be mistaken again, and therefore in this confusion she knew not what to do: whileft fhe was in thefe thoughts a maid withaCandleappeared, who passing through the Room gave her clear fightthather Husband was in the other Bed, shetherefore resolved now to rise, take her Clothes, and go to Bed to her Husband; but he who had flept hard all night was now awaked with the noise of the maid passing through the Chamber, and therefore he leaps out of the Bed and felt for a Chamber-pot. at the length he found one, having used it, and going to return to Bed where he had layen, his wife then took the opportunity to call to him, faying, Sweet-heart, whither go you? you miftake your Bed: No fure, faid the man. where are you? Here, the faid; he hearing her voice foon found out where she was, but could not prefently beperfwaded that he had layen the reall night, you shall fee that by and by, replyed the, when you can fee your clothes on this Bed: if it befo, then you are in the right faid he, and that he agreed to foon after day light appeared and he feeing his clothes on the Bed, was fatisfied: and thus was his bufiness done, and he not knew it, and the woman in the morning enquiring for the man who had been her Chamber-fellow, could not finde him; she was earnest in her inquiry after him, and this raised some jealousse in me, but I was soon after resolved of all by the man himself, who came again to our house and told me. This was a fine Christmas Frolick, I will adde one more, and so have done with them.

The Fidlers of our Town haveing had good trading this Christmas were grown proud and furly, and had abused some Gentlemen, who told mine Host of it: he who was good at inventing mifchief, foon contrived a way to be revenged of them, and in order thereunto, the next day a confiderable Dinner was bespoke, and the Fidlers were fent for to attend and play to them, which they did all Dinner. The Gentlemen having dined, the Fidlers had the Remains for their Dinner, and then again they fell a tuning their inftruments and played luftily, whileft the Guefts drank of their Cups as roundly; at length they fell to Dancing, and many Countrey Dances they had, spending the day in all manner of Joval and Sprightly Recreations; the night being come, and therefore a fit time to put their plot in execution, the vagain Danced feveral Rambling Dances, and anonthey all defired and agreed to Dancethe Cuthion-dance, which they did, and in their humours rambled from one Room to another all over the house. this mufick pacing it afore them, and now one dropt away, and anon another, till in the end all the Guefts were gone, and none were left but the Fidlers, who ftill plaid on expecting their Company. Mine Hoft feeing it was now time came into them, and causing them to cease their playing, asked where are the two guests? they reply'd they knew not: no, said he, if you do not finde them, you are like to suffer; for if you have played away my Guests, you shall pay their reckoning: he was so peremptory in his demands, that it was to no purpose to contradict it; and the reckoning amounting to three pounds, he made the five Fidlers pay ten shillings a man, and told them he was a looser in abaiting them ten shillings of his reckoning; they were forced and could not help it, and therefore paid down their dust, and they who had not money enough were sain to leave their Fidles, and go home without, and end Christmas to the Tune of Lachrymæ.

CHAP. II.

Mris. Dorothy discourses of mine Hosts misfortunes, As first how he was cheated of a Silver Bowl. Secondly, of a thirty pound reckoning; and Thirdly, was carried away Prisoner, and forced to pay Fifty pound for his Ransom.

Thus, continued Mris. Dorothy, was this revenge managed by mine Hoft, and the Guefts who had the reckoning of thirty pound to pay, came the next day and paid it, and then appointed to come the next week and fpend the fifty fhillings mine Hoft hadgotten from the Fidlers, which they did accordingly; and thus faid fhe, did we finish our Christmas: and now I hope, friends, faid she to me and Mris. Mary, that you will give me leave to finish my discourse; not so long as you can think of any more of these stories, replyed I, and so did M. Mary; and thereupon we both joyned in our defires to entreat her to proceed. Well, replyed she, if I must, then I will alter the Nature and Ouality of my discourse, and as I have told you of mine Hosts good fortune, and wayes to get money, so I will acquaint you with fome of his misfortunes, and how he loft money; for Fortune was the fame thing to him as she hath been to me, and I think to all others; we all have our feveral turns and changes, fometimes we are on the top, and anon on the bottom of Fortunes Wheel; and as that is, fo is the World, round and rouling, and still in motion, and fo are our Fortunes various: I replyed, I had full experience of this truth, and could freely fubscribe to it; but, continued I, good honest Doll, let us be beholding to you so much as to prevent your discourse, and relate all the other transactions that you can remember befel during your stay in this pleafant place, for by what you have told us, I must needs term it so. We, said she, since you will have it fo, i'le endeavour to fatisfie you, and then fhe thus began.

I have already told you of one of my Hofts miffortunes in the quart pot, and how he was forced to pay twenty shillings instead of satisfaction which he expected; it was not long before that, that he had a more sensible loss, for one morning in comes a Countryman which calls for a Flaggon of Beer, and defires a private Room, for, sayes he, I have company a coming to me, and we have business. The Tapster accordingly shewshim a room, and brings a Flaggon of Beer, and with it a Silver Cupworth three pound; the Countryman drank off his beer, and call'd for another Flaggon, & withal for mine Host to bear him company: mine Host feeing him alone, sate and talked with him about state assairs, till they were both weary & mine host was ready to leave him; well, said the Countryman, I see my Company will not come, and therefore I will not ftay no longer, neither did he; but having drank up his Beer, he call'd to pay: A groat, quoth the Tapster; there 'tis, faid the Countrey-man, laying it down, and fo he went out of the Room, the Tapster staide behinde to bring away the Flaggon and Silver Cup, but though he found the Flaggon, yet the Cup was not to be found, wherefore he hastily runs out and cries, Stop the man. The Countrey-man was not in fuch hafte, but that he quickly ftopt of himfelf; he was not quite out of the doors, and therefore befoon returned to the Bar, where when he was come, he faid, Well, what is the matter? what would you have? The Cup, faid the Tapfter that I brought to you; I left it in the Room, faid the Country-man: I cannot finde it, faid the Tapster: and at this noise mine Host appeared, who hearing what was the matter, faid, I am fure the Cup was there even now, for I drank in it; it is there still for me, faid the Countrey-man: Look then further, faid mine Hoft; the Tapster did so, but neither high nor low could he finde this Cup; wellthen, faid mine Host to the Countrey-man, if it be gone you must have it, or know of the going of it, and therefore you shall pay for it: Not I, faid the Countrey-man, you fee I have none of it: I have not been out of your house, nor no body hath been with me, how then can I have it? you may fearch me. Mine Host caused him to be searched, but there was no Cup to be found, however mine Hoft was refolv'd not to lofe his Cup fo, and therefore he fends for a Constable, and charges him with the Countreyman, and threatens him with the Justice; all this would not do, and the Countrey-man told him, That threatned Folks live long, and if he would go before a Juftice, he was ready to go with him. Mine Hoft was more and more perplexed, and feeing he could not have his cup, nor nothing confeis'd, before the Justice they went, when they came there mine Host made his complaint, and told the story as truely it was, and the Country-man made the fame answer there, as he had done before to mine Host; the Justice was perplexed, not knowing how to do justice, here was a Cup lost, and the Country-man did not deny but he had it, but gone it was, and although the Country-man was purfued he did not flie, he had no body with him, and therefore it could not be conveighed away by confederacy, and for his own part he had been, and was again fearched, but none found about him, and he in all respects pleaded innocency: this, though confidered and weighed in the ballance of justice, he could not think that the Country-man had it, and therefore to commit him would be injustice; he confidered all he could, and inclined to favour the Country-man, who was altogether a stranger, and he believed innocent, especially when he confidered what a kind of Person mine Host his accuser was, of whose life and converfation he had both known and heard enough, and cause him to believe that it might be possible that all this might be a Trick of mine Hosts to cheat the Country-man, and therefore he gave his judgement, that he did not believe by the Evidence that was given, that the Country-man had the Cup, and that he would not commit him unless mine Host would lay, and fwear point blank Felony to his charge, and of that he defired mine Hoft to beware. Mine Hoft feeing which way it was like to go, faid no more, but that he left it to Mr. Juftice, who being of this opinion I told you of, discharged the country-man, and advised mine Hoft to let him hear no more of these matters,& if he could not fecure his plate, & know what company hedelivereditto, then to keep it up. Mine Hoft thanked the Justice for his advice, and so departed, the Countrey-man going about his business, and he returning home, being heartily vexed at his Lofs, and the carriage of the whole Affair, which was neither for his profit norcredit; buthe was forced to fit down with the Lofs, being heartily vexed to think how he should lose the Cup: he threw away fome money in going to a Cunning-man to know what was become of it, but all they could tell him was, that he would hear of it again, and fo he did shortly after; though it was to his further cost, and to little purpose. He had some occasions at our Country-Townduring the time of the Assizes, and there feeing the prisoners brought to their Trials, among others he efpyed the Countrey-man whom he had charged with the Silver Cup, by enquiring what what washis crime? was told it was for picking a Pocket: Nay then, faid mine Hoft, I may chance to hear of my Bowl again, and thereupon when the Tryal was over, and the Prisoners carried back to the Goal, he went and enquired for the Countrey-man, to whose presence he was foon brought; Oh Lord, master! said he, how do you? who thought to have feen you here? nay faid mine Hoft, who thought to have feen you here? I believe you have not met with fo good friends in this Countrey as you did at our Town, of our Justice; but let that pass, come let us drink together, whereupon a Flaggon of Beer was call'd for, and fome Tobacco, which they very lovingly drank off, and fmoak'd together; which done, faid mine Host to the Countreyman; I would gladly be refolved in one point which (I question not) but you can do; I suppose you mean (faid the Countrey-man) about the old business, of the Silver Cup you loft; yes truly faid mine Hoft, & the losing of it doth not so much vex me, as the manner howitwasloft; & therefore, continued he if you will do me the kindness, to give mesatisfaction what became of it, I do protest I will acquit you although you are directly guilty. No, this will not do, replyed the Country-man, there is fomewhat elfe in the cafe: well then, faid mine Host, if you will tell me, I will give you ten shillings to drink. Ready money does very well in a Prison, faid the Country-man, and will prevail much; but how shall I be affured you will not prosecute me, if I should chance to be concerned? for that, replyed mine Host, I can give you no other Warrant but my Oath, which I will inviolably keep: well then faid the Country-man, down with the merry Griggs, let me handle the money, and I'le be very true to you; and as for your charging me with it, I fear you not. Mine hoft being big with expectation to know how this cleanly conveyance was wrought, foon laid down the ten shillings; and then the Country-man thus proceeded: I must consess that I know which way your Cup went, but when you charged me with it I had it not; neither was it out of the room, and I must tell you this, that if you had fought narrowly, you might havefound it, but it was not there long after. We who live by our wits must work by policy more then down right strength, and this cannot be done without Confederates, and I had fuch in the management of this affair, for Heft the Cup fastned with fost wax under the middle of the board of the Table where I drank, which place of the Table by reason it was covered with a cloath, as you may remember it was, it could not well be feen; and therefore you and your fervants miffed of it: you know that very willingly I went with you to the Justices; and whilst we were gone those Friends and Confederates of mine whom I had appointed, and knew the Room and everything elfe, went into the house, and into the same Room, where they found the filver Cup, and without the least suspition went fairly off with it, and at a place appointed we met, and there acquainted one another with our Adventures, and what purchases we had made, we equally shared them between us. Mine Hoft at the hearing of this difcourfe was mightily furprized, although fully fatisfied; but yet, faid he, I would be refolved one queftion, which is this, how if we had found it where you had put it whilft you were there? why truly replyed the cheat (for now I may call him fo) then you could have charged me with nothing, and I would have put it off with a jeft, and if that would not have done, the most you could have done, had been only to have kicked and beaten me, and those things we of our quality must venture: you know the old Proverb, Nothing venture, nothing have, and Faint heart never won fair Lady; and we have this other Proverb to encourage us, that Fortunchelpsthebold; as it doth commonly those of our quality, and she did me I thank her in that attempt. And there did this Varlet descant upon his Actions, to the great fatisfaction of mine Hoft, who finding there was no more to be had of him, left him, and foon after the Town; coming home, and giving us an account of this adventure; and this was another of his misfortunes, which was foon after followed by another worfe than the last, and thus it was. A Company of pretending Gallants one evening arrived at our house, and there was in their company a young lad of about ten years of age, on whom they all waited, giving him respect equal to a Person of Honor, and their Mafter; they were foon furnished with Lodgings, the best in the house, where they bespake a plentiful fupper, which was provided, dreft, and fent to them. Mine Host enquiring what, and who the young Gentle-man was, whom he supposed was their

Master; they told him that he was the Son of a French Marquess, giving him a name to that purpose, and that his Father their Lord and Master, would in few dayes be there; likewife that they being recomended to this house by a Friend of his, who warranted them good usage, they were come thither, and there they intended to ftay till their Lord came. Mine Hoft was highly pleafed with this recital, and he questioned not the truth of it, because the young Gentleman could not or would not fpeak any thing but a little Gibberish French. These Guests staid there a fortnight eating and drinking in most plentiful manner; and every day fome or all of them did ride out, leaving only one person to wait on their Lord, and they came home very honeftly at night. They had now been fourteen dayes and lain at Wrack and Manger, they and their Horses; and their Bill amounted to thirty pounds, which being a round fum of money; he began to try if he could get any, and to that end fpake by the by to him that was chief perfon next to the young Lord, but he was deaf of that ear, and told him that it would not be above two or three dayes e're he was furetheir Lordhimfelf would come, and then he should not only be paid, but also rewarded for the care, and respects he had shewed to his Son: Mine Host was fatisfied with their reasons, and so went about his businefs; and fo did this Blade about his; for calling a confultation of his Brethren, they refolved to be gone the next day, and give mine Hoft the go by for his Reckoning, and therefore they fo ordered the matter. that that night whilft they were at supper, and mine Host with them; in enters another man, a new face, and enquired if my young Lord fuch a one, and his Attendants were there? yes faid the Hoftler, who took his Horfe, and then calling the Chamberlain, he was conducted into the Room where the rest of his Acquaintance were, he being entered the Room, made his obeviance to his young Mafter; and then putting his hand into his Pocket pull'd out a Letter, which he prefented to him; and another who fate next him took from him, opened, and read, telling mine Hoft that the Letter was from their Lord, who promifed to be there with them by the next day at noon; glad did they feem to be, and fo was mine Hoft, who thought now he was near the receiving of his money: the company then told him that he must provide a plentiful dinner, and that they would allride forthin the morning to meet their old Master, only they would leave their young Master behind to his care; to this mine Host was content, and the next morning they arose early, mounted their horses, and away they went, leaving their Lordin Bed. Mine Hoft provided dinner according to the directions, and noon came, but no Lord, or Attendants; at length dinner was forced to be taken up, or spoiled, and then the young Lord was enquired for, who was still in Bed, and could not rife, for they had taken his fine Clothes with them: in fine, upon fearch, an old Country Suit was found, which now our young Lord owned to be his, and could fpeak English, faying, they were gone and carried away his fine cloaths. Mine Hosthearing he could speak English, asked him feveral questions, which the Boy answered readily enough, and by that he understood that they took him up in those Clothes, and other rare matters if he would go with them, be ruled by them, and learn a few heard words; and fo in conclusion mine Host found to his cost, that they were a company of cheats, who came to do that to him, he had done to others, and though his lofs was great, yet he was forced to fit down contented; as for the Boy he being abfolutely innocent, he was only turned out of the doors to feek his fortune. Thus, faid Miftrefs Dorothy you feehe had his bitter with the fweet, and to his fweet meat he had fower fawce; and although his lofs was confiderable enough, yet foon after he had another of worfer confe-

You must note, that it was now in the time of rebellion and there was a finall garrifon of Souldiers quartered in our Town of the Round-heads Party, and about ten miles off there was another Garrison of Cavaliers. Now one day there came to our Town two Gentlemen very well mounted and armed, and they had a Pass from a round-headed Collonel our Neighbour, and coming to our Town, and enquiring for the best Inn, they were directed to our house, where they took up their Quarters; they pretended themfelves to be Persons of Quality, and therefore spent pretty handfomely at the first, but in their stay there, which was about eight dayes, they had run five pounds on the score; mine Host desiring his money, they told him fuddenly he should have it, moneys were coming to them, but if he had not the patience to ftay until their money came, then (he knew) that they had two good Herfes in his Stable, and he should in lieu of his money have which hepleafed, at fuch a rate as any indifferent person should adjudg the best of them to be worth: mine Hoft feeing them answer him fo fair, was askind as they, and told them that he did believe them to be Gentlemen of quality, and that he fcorned to undervalue them fo much as to difmount them, and as they came on Horfe-back to depart on foot, but that he had rather wait a while longer for the Money, which they faid they flaid for: they kindly thanked him for his courtefie, and promised him to requite it; and thereupon all Perfons refred

well fatisfied, but no money coming at the time they faid they expected, he again asked them for moneys; and indeed it was their defire that he should do so, or elfethedefign they had in hand, and intended to carry on, could not be well executed; and therefore that they might bring their project to execution, they again offered him one of their horses; he had a great mind to one of them, having a Customer ready that would give him a very good price, told them that fince they were fo willing he was fotoo, and that they might possibly have their Horse again when their money came: it is all as one for that, replyed the Gentlemen, we had rather go without horses than you should be diffatiffied, and therefore choose which of the two you will have: they being both, faid he good, I care not which of them, and to that end if you please to morrow we will all three ride out of the Town a mile or fo, and then you may conclude which you like beft, and as for the price we will well enough agree upon that; to this mine hoft confented, and the next day they all three mounted their horses, and away they rode, but to the great forrow of us all, for these Gentlemen who had lain thus long in our house were Caveliers, and belonged to the adjoyning Garrifon, and when they had drawn mine hoft with them as far as they could willingly perswade him, and that he offered to return, they then drew, and with Sword in one hand, and Piftol in the other, they came up to him and commanded him to stand, for he was their Prisoner, he asked them for what? and would have difputed the cafe with them but it was to no purpose; they were deaf to all perfwations, and he living in a Round-headed Garrison they concluded him to be one, and therefore he was their lawful Prifonor, and as one they would guard him to their quarters; fo they faid, and fo they did, and taking his Sword from him, they caused him to ride on apace, till they brought him to their Quarters; before their Commander they conducted him, who adjudged him to be a Prisoner, and the next day resolved on his Ranfome, which he valued at a hundred pounds: the one halfhe ordered the Gentlemen should have, and the other to be devided among the indigent Souldiers? this was his doom: and now my poor Hoft was delivered into Cuftody; he writ away to his Wife to acquaint her with this doleful News, she could not raife fo much Money, and therefore he was like to continue; but in the end, by the affiftance of fome Gentlemen who were Guests to the house and Caveliers, the got one half of the Ranfome to be abated, and so the fifty pounds being sent, he was delivered up, and came home to chear his Wife and Family.

CHAP. XIII.

At the execution of a Felon feveral Cheaters meet, and feeing a Countrey-man draw a Purfe of money refolve to cheat him of it, which they do first by a brass Chain, and afterwards by drawing him in to bet at Gameing. They were again cheated by mine Host, and the principal Cheat comically punished.

M Iftress Dorothy here putting a ftop to her difcourfe, we thereby underflood fhe had finished, wherefore I thus discoursed her: truly now I find that to be true of your Host, which I have experimented in my felf, and that we must meet with many rubs & misfortunes, but these were but trivial to him considering his great comings in, by his extraordinary gain intrading: that struereplyed M. Dorothy, but as he had confiderable gain, fo he had many wayes to fpend it, and many spenders, his Wife and Children being all as expensive as might be, and what was got over the Devils Back, was spent under the Devils belly: and therefore though much money went through his hands in a year, yet it went through, and little fluck there or flaid with him, fo that he was feldome Mafter of any confiderable fum of money; and therefore it went hard to raife this fum of money, and fome of his Plate was fain to march off to produce it; but that being paid and he come home, we were all well enough fatisfied, and he told his wife this was most certainly the fortune of War, but he questioned not but in short time he would fetch it upagain; as indeed he did in using those feveral ways I have told you of; and now I hope (faid fhe) I have told you enough to fatisfie your curiofity; truly, replyed I, you have taken a great deal of pains, but if you have any more in your budget out with them, for what you have hitherto related hath not only been pleafant but profitable, and very full of variety. Well, (replyed she) since you will have it so, I will proceed a little further, and recount some passages as confiderable as any you have hitherto heard. There was (continued she) not long before this time a bloody murder committed, for an honest Country-man that lived about fix miles from us, one market day was driving his Team of Horses and Cart loaden with Corn to our Town to fell, and being come about half way, he was met by a lufty tatterdemallion rafcal that was on foot, travelling on the Road, he first asked the Countrey-man to give him fomething, telling him he was a poor Traveller and had been robb'd: quoth the Countrey-man, friend, I have nothing to give you, for I have no money, being now going to Market with this Corn to make money of it; the fellow feemed to rest contented with this answer, and thereupon walked on with the Countrey-man; but they had not gone far but the Devilentring into this fellow, perfwaded him, here he might have a great prize, and therefore still walked on, he at length seeing the Road clear of Passengers, and a convenient place for him to put his purpose in practice, with a lusty Cudgel he had in his hand, he struck the poor Countrey-man over the Head, that down he fell a sprawling, and not content therewith, drew him a little out of the road, and in most cruel manner cut his throat; having this done. he feizeson the fore-horfe of the Team, and leads him also with the Team and Cart out of the road to a convenient place, where he ftops, and then drawing the body of the murthered Countrey-manto a Ditch-fide, he there made a hole, and having ftrip'd him of all his clothes, buried him, and stripping himself of those Rags he had on, he putting on the Countrey-mans cloathes, buried his own with the Countrey-mans body; and having thus done, he lead the Team into the Roadagain; this was done one winters morning early before day; and so he had the conveniency to do all this without interruption, and now with Whip in hand, and habited like a Country-man, he drives on to our town to Market; he took up his standing at the ufualplace, and had the good fortune not to be questioned of any body, but enquiring how the rates of corn went, he accordingly fold his at a good price as any and he not only made money of his Corn, but hearing there was a horse Fair that day at a Town but three milesoff, and having difpatch't betimes he drove thither and foon had a Customer for both Horses and Cart. and therehe bought him a faddle horfe to ride on, being thus fitted to his purpofe, he was not long e're he met with a company of Shirks and Cheats, who intending to chouse him, he was too crasty for them, and enters himself into their society, and by degrees became a Knight of the Pad, an obsolute High-way-man, but the Devil who had fet him to work, was not longe're he paid him his Wages, for he was purfued for a Robbery he had committed, and fo narrowly followed that he was forced to take the water, to cross a River, he leap'din on Horfeback, but the Horfe was foon drowned, and he narrowly escap'd to a little Island in the River, where he was still in fight of his purfuers, they getting a Boat came up to him, he being armed attempted to discharge a Pistol, but by reason the powder was wet, it would not off whereupon they coming nearer to him he drewhis Sword, and though there were three in the Boathe kept them from landing, and being refolved to fell his life at a dear Rate, he kill'd one of them out-right, and wounded another, but now another Boat with more help coming hewas in danger to be loft, wherefore putting his Sword in his mouth he again took the water, and fwam away, and they after him, but length feeing it was in vain to refift he fuffered himfelf to be taken, and bound, led away to the Justice, and thence to Prison, where he believing he must dye, grew some what penitent, and not onely confefs'd the Fact he was then accufed for, but among other mischiefs he likewise acknowledged the Murther, and Robbery I have told you off; and the Affizes being come, and he tryed, and confessing, he was condemned to be hang'd in Chains at the place where he committed the murther; this being not above a mile from our Town, at the day of Execution it drew most of the people out of it to fee the end of this wicked wretch, who did fom what penitenrly, but his Penitence and Repentance did not work one jot upon others of his quality, who were there prefent; but ascommonly

one Wedding-feaft begets another Wedding, fo one Execution does ufually produce another; and they who are Spectators at one Execution, in fhort time come to be executed themfelves: whether there were any perfons at this execution that did foon after take his turn, I know not, but I am fure there were prefent many Cheats, and Pick-pockets, and fuch fort of people, for our Town was that day pretty well throng'd with them. Among other practifes that was ufed, this was one.

Two or three Cheaters going together faw a Country-man who had a Purfe of money in his hand, they had observed him to draw it to pay for some Gingerbread he bought on the way; wherefore they closed with him, and endeavoured to nip his Bung, pick his Pocket, but could not, for he knowing he was in a dangerous place, and among as dangerous Company, put his Purfe of money into his Breeches, which being close at the knees, secured it from falling out, and befides he was very fly in having any body come too near him. Our Practitioners in the Art of Thievery, feeing this would not do, fet their wits a working further; and having all their tools about them in readiness, taking a convenient time and place, one of them goes before and drops a Letter, another of his Companions who had joyned himfelf to our Countrey-man, feeing it ly fairly for the purpose, savestohim, Look you what is here! but although the Countrey-man did floop to take up the Letter, yet the Cheat was too nimble for him in that, and having it in his hand, faid, Here is fomewhat elfe befides a Letter, I cry half, faid the Country-man: well, faid the Cheat, indeed you floop'd as well as I, but I have it; however I'le be fair with you; but let us fee what it is, & whether it is worth the dividing; & thereupon he breaks open the letter, & there fees a fair chain or neck-lace of Gold: Good Fortune (fayes the Cheater) if this be right Gold: how shall we know that, faid the Countrey man? let us see what the Letter says, which being short and to the purpose fpake thus:

Brother John, I have here fent you back this necklace of gold you fent me; not for any dislike I have to it, but my Wife is covetous and would have a biggar, this comes not to above seven pounds, and she would have one of ten pounds; therefore I pray get it changed for one of that price, and send it by this bearer to your loving Brother, N. B.

Nay, then we have good luck (faid the Cheater) but I hope, faid he to the Countrey-man, you will not expect a full share, for you know I found it, and befides, if we should divide it, I know not how to break it in pieces, but I doubt it would fpoil it, therefore I had rather have my share in money. Well, said the Countrey-man, I'le give you your share in money, provided I may have a full share; that you shall, said the Cheater, and therefore I must have of you three pounds ten shillings, the price in all being as you fee, feven pounds. I, but faid the Countreyman (thinking to be too cunning for the Cheat) it may be worth feven pounds in money in all, fashion and all, but we must not value that, but only the Gold, therefore I think three pounds in money is better than half the Chain, and fo much I'le give you if you will let me have it: well content faid the Cheat, but then you shall give me a pint of wine over and above; to this the Countrey-man alfo agreed, and to our town they came, and into our house, and there the Cheat had the three pounds, and the Countrey-man the Chain, who believed he had that day rifen with his A--- upwards, because he had met with fo good fortune. They drank off their drink, and were going away, but the Cheat not having yet done with him (intended to get the rest of the money from him) offered him his pint of Wine, which the Countrey-man accepted of; but before they had drank it off, in comes another of the same Tribe. who asked whether fuch a man, naming one, were there? no, (faid the Bar-keeper,) our Cheater and Countrey-man fitting near the Cheat, asked of the enquirer, did you notaskforfuch a man? Yes, faid the enquirer, why faid our Cheater, I can tell you this news of him that it will not be long e're he comes hither, for I methim as I came in; and he appointed me to come in here and ftay for him: well, then I were best to ftay, faid the Enquirer: but (continued he) we were best to take a bigger Room, for we cannot stir our selves in this; agreed, said the Cheater, so the reckoning was paid, and they agreed to take a larger Room, leaving word at the Bar that if any enquiry were made for them, there they should find them; they went into another Room, and our Countrey-man having done his bufinefs would be going; no, faid the Cheater, I pray flay and keep us company, it shall not cost you nothing; well, then said the Countrey-man, I amcontenttostavalittle: they being now entred into their Room, call'd for a quart of Wine, and drank it off, what shall we do to spend time, faid the last Cheater? for I am weary of ftaying for this man, are you fure you are not miftaken? no, faid the other: one of them then pretends to walk a turn in the Room, and coming to the window behind a Cushion he pretends to finde a pair of Cards (which indeed he himfelf had laid there) look you here, faid he to the Countreyman and th'other, I have found fome tools, now we may go to work, and fpend our time, if you will play; not I, faid the Country-man, I'le never play; then

I will, faid the other Cheat, but not for money: why then, faid the other, for fix pence, to be fpent, and the Game Putt; they being agreed, and my Countreyman being made Overfeer of the Game, fell to playing, and the Countrey-mans first Acquaintance had the better of it, winning twelve Games to the others four: come, faid he, what shall we do with all this drink? we will play two pence wet and four pence dry; to this the other agreed, and fo they play'd, and at this low gaming the first Cheathad in short time won of the second ten shillings in money; the second seemed to be angry, and therefore proposed to play for all money, hoping to making himself whole again; nay, said the other, I shall not refuse your proposition, because I have won your money; and therefore to it they went, and the first Cheater had still the same luck, and won ten fhillings more; then the other would play for twelve pence a Game, no, faid the first Cheater, I am not willing to exceed fix pence a Game, I will not alter what I have begun, left I change luck, unless this honest Countrey-man will go my halves; I have no mind to Gaming, reply'd the country-man; you need not play faid the other, I'le do that, and you fee my luck is good, venture a Crown with me, you know both our lucke have been, and I hope will continue good; well, content, faid the Countrey-man, and fo they proceeded, still our first Cheat had good fortune, and he, and the Countrey-man won ten shillings a piece more of the other, which made them merry; and the other was mad; he therefore told them he would win the Horfe, or lofe the Saddle, and venture all now; and drawing out about thirty shillings; said, come take it all, win it and wear it; and fo they played; but they had now drawn the Countrey-man in fufficiently, and he was flush; but it lasted not long thus, e're he was taken down a button-hole lower, for the fortune changed, and all that he had won was loft, and forty shillings more: He was now angry, but to no purpose, for he did not discover their foul play, and he in hopes of his good fortune ventured, and loft the other forty shillings; and then he faid he would go halfes no longer, for he thought he would be merry and wife, and if he could not make a winning, he would be fure to make a faving Bargain, which he reckoned he should do, because although he had lost four pounds in money, & given the Cheat three pounds for his share of the Chain, that yet he should make seven pounds of the Chain, and fo be no Lofer: they feeing he would not play, left off, and he that had won the money was content to give a Collation, which was called for, but our first Cheatpretending much anger at his Lofs, was refolved to venture more; and to playing again hewent, and in thort time he recovered much of hisloffes; this angred the Countrey-man that he had not joyned with him, and in the end, feeing his good luck continued, and that he won, he again went halfs, but then it was not long that they thrived, but the Countrey-man was forced to draw his Purfe, and in the end lofe all his money, which was near twenty pounds: He did not think his condition to be fo bad as it was, because he believed he had a Chain worth feven pounds in his Pocket, and thereforehereckoned he had not loft all. By this time feveral of the rest of the Gang (having been abroad. employed on the fame account, Couzening and Cheating of others) now flocked all to our House, being the place appointed for their Rendezvouz, there they acquainted one another of their feveral Gains and Prizes; and then they fell a drinking, they drank about luftily for joy, and the Countrey-man for anger; and mine Hoft was called up to make one in the Company; he foon understood what kind of Guests he had, and how they had cheated the poor Country-man; and therefore he was resolved to serve them in the same kind; he therefore put forward the Affairs of drinking, and some being hungry call'd for Victuals; he told them he would get them what they pleas'd; and they being determined to take up their Quartersthere, for that night, a Supper was bespoke for all the Company, fuch as mine Hoft in his difcretion should think fit, he told them they should have it, and accordingly went down to provide Supper, he foon returnes and helps them to drink whilft Supper was dreffing; by this time they were all perfectly drunk, he then commands up fupper, and they fall too with a Shoulder of Mutton and two Capons, eat and drink hard, and call for more, he tells them it is coming, but they now having fate still a whilewere all fallen asleep, he makes use of this opportunity, and brings up half a dozen empty foul Difhes, or at leaftwife full of bones offeveral fowls; as Pidgeons, Partridges, Phefants, and all the Remains of Victuals that had been left in the house that day; and strews and places some on their feveral Trenchers, and thus he leaves them. Some of them fleeping, and fitting uneafily fell from their Chairs, and fo awaked themselves; and their companions being throughly awaked, they again fell to eating and drinking; fome turning over the bones that were brought, faid, Howcamethesehere, I do not remember that I eat any fuch Victuals? Nor I, faid another, whereupon mine Hoftwascall'd, and the question was asked him: why furely, Gentlemen, you forget your felves, faid he, you have flept fair; I believe you will forget the Coller of Brawn you had too, that cost me fix shillings out of my Pocket; how! Brawn! said one, I. Brawn faid mine Hoft, you had it, and are like to pay for it; you'l remember nothing anon, this is a fine drunken bout indeed; fo it is, faid one of the Company; fure we have been in a Dream; but it matters not, mine Host, you must and shall be paid: Give us the other dozen bottles, and bring a Bill, that we may pay our Reckoning. This Order was prefently obey'd, and a Bill brought, which in all came to feven pounds; and I verily believe hemifreckoned them for meat and drink, the one half, and told them he used them very kindly; they were bound to believe him, and therefore every man was call'd to pay their shares; my Countrey-manshrunk behind, intending to escape, which one of the Company feeing, call'd him forwards, and faid Come, We must tell Noses, and every man pay alike; the Countrey-man defired to be excus'd; and faid he had no money; which they knowing well enough, at length agreed to acquit him. This done, they went to their feveral Lodgings to bed, and it was time, for it waspast midnight, they all flept better than the Country-man, who could hardly fleep a wink for thinking of his Misfortunes, and having such good luck in the morning, it should prove so bad e're night; But morning being come, he and they all arofe, and the Countrey-mans money being all fpent, he knew it was to no purpose for him to stay there; wherefore he refolved to go to the Goldsmith's in the Town, and fell, or pawn his Chain, that he might have fome money to carry him home: Being come to the Goldsmith's he produced the Chain, which although at the first fight he thought to be gold, yet upon trial he found it otherwife, and that it was but brafs guilt; he tells the Countrey-man the fame, who at this heavy News was like to break his heart: The Goldfmith feeing the Countrey-man in fuch a melancholy dump, enquires of him how he came by it? he foon acquainted him with the manner, and every circumstance: the Goldsmith as soon understood the Cheat, and advifeshim togotothe Justice, and get a Warrant for him that had thus cheated him: and the Countrey-man telling him that he had no money, nor friend, being a stranger; he himself went with him to the Justice, who soon understanding the matter, granted his Warrant; and the Goldsmith procured a Constable to go with him to our house, where the first Cheater was apprehended, and carried before the Juftice; who upon examination explain'd the Case, and finding the fellow guilty, ordered that he should be led to the whipping post, and there be whipped, and then be fent on a horse back, with his face towards the horsetail, and so led out of the Town; and withal, the Justice sent away the Constable to our house, to apprehend and bring the rest of the gang before him; but he came too late, for the Birds were slown, doubting fome fuch matter; fo that only the first Cheater suffered the punishment aforesaid; but I remember he was so impudent that when he came by our house on horseback, with his face to the horse tail, Ah, ha! faid one, what is the meaning of this? nothing, faid the Cheater, but that this horfe is given me, and I am refolved to ride this way to make good the Proverb, that I may not look a gift horfe in the mouth.

CHAP. XIV.

Two Shoemakers are cheated of a pair of Boots, and mine Host gets another pair of them. Mine Host and one of the Shoemakers find out the Cheater, who is apprehended, and sent to Prison but is released by the Judge for an enterprize of his Companions, who acted wonderful Feats by slight of hand.

THus was every one a gainer but the poor Countrey-man, who was forc'd to march home by weeping Crofs, only with a brafs chain worth eighteen pence, instead of above twenty pounds which he had brought out with him. Mine Hoft gained indifferently well, but the Cheaters more, being fully fraighted; but as they got it eafily, fo they fpent it merrily; and then went to work for more, though they devided the fpoil equally between them, yet none had the punishment but the Chain-Merchant, and I believe he had as many lashes on the back as there was links on the chain; he took his punishment very patiently, only when the blow came he would thrink up his thoulders, which a flander by feeing, told him that did him more harm than good; it is no matter for that, friend, faid the cheater, you may spare your instructions, for I shall not follow them, and now I am to be whip'd I will do as I Lift, and when you come to the fame fport, and it is your turn to be whip'd, you may behave your felf then as you pleafe, thus was he pleafantly reguith when he was in the midft of his punishment, and when he was on horse-back he answered the People as roguishly as I told you; but being come to the Towns end he was dismounted, and sent packing. Thus were we rid of one Crew of Cheats, but truly, if all the Cheats of the Town had been so served as this was, mine Host must also have march'd off, who had he had his due, did as justly deserve it; but it is the little sort of Knaves and Rogues that are punished, the greater scaping Scot-free, as now mine Host did. After this Trick we had another that was altogether as pleasant, and before the finishing of it, there were some pleasant paffages, and thus it was.

A Gentleman-Cheater comes to our house, and staysthere aday; walks about the Town to finde some purchase, but lost his labor, he seeing there was no money to be had, was refolved to play at fmall Game rather than stand out; and somewhat therefore he would do if it were but to bear his charges; he had observed that there were but two Shoemakers in the Town, one at the one end, and the other at the other end: he faw they were well furnished with boots and he wanted a pair, he therefore coming home to his quarters, fent our Boy to one of the Shoemakers to defire him to come to our house, to bring a pair of boots to a Gentleman; the Sho-maker in hopes of a good Customer returns with the Boy, and brings two or three pair, our Gentleman trys them on, and at last is pleas'd with one pair, only one of them was too little in the instep, for that faid the Shoemaker, it is a fmall fault, and I can remedy it in an hours time, by putting it on the Last; our Gentleman intending that so he should, asked, what price? eighteen shillings was demanded, but fifteen was the price agreed upon; well, said the Gentleman, carry back the boot that is so defective, and put it on the Last, let it stay on it two hours at least, and then come and bring it, and take your money; very good, faid the Shoemaker, and fo taking up the remainder of the Boots he departed, not distrusting any thing, and not thinking any man who had two legs could much advantage himfelf with one fingle Boot. Our Gentleman being now Master of one Boot, was refolved to have another, and therefore he again calls the Boy, and defires him to go to the other Shoemaker, and wish him to come and bring a pair of Boots: for, faid he, the other Shoemaker you brought could not fit me; the boy believed him, not thinking of the transaction, it being done privately in his Chamber: The boy went, and brings the other Shoemaker with him, who likewife brought two or three pairs of Boots; our Gentleman likewife tries them, and chusing that pair that was likest to the otherhe had, he likewife agreed with the Shoemakerupon price, but made the fame exceptions with this laft, as he had done with the former, advising him to put the Boot on the Last, for one hour and a half, and at that time to come exactly and receive his money; away went the Shoemaker with the rest of his Boots, leaving the odd one behind, and no foonerwashe gone but he draws on his new Boots, and calling for a Reckoning, paid it, and his horfe being bridled and fadled he mounted, and away he rode. At the time appointed both the Shoemakers came, fo justly together that they met at the Gate with each of them a Boot under his Arm; they both asked for our Gentleman, but hearing he was fled and gone, they both look'd blank upon the matter; mine Hoft was prefent, and understanding the flory laughed heartily at it; they knew not whether they should be angry or pleas'd, but being both Brothers of a Trade and both ferved alike, they refolved to laugh too, though it were but with one fide of their mouths, and fo they fate them down and drank together; one Potdrewdown an other, and being of the Gentle Craft they were both good fellows, and at length a Bottle of wine they call'd for; mine Host seeing them in a merry vain, said, Gentlemen, I'le make a proposition to you, faith since the Gent. hath made a pair of two odd boots do you fo too and let these as the other two go together, and therefore fillip up Cross or Pile who shall have both; I but said one, I am not willing to hazard my Boot for nothing, therefore thus I propose it; let us have the other Bottle of Wine, and then let us fillip Cross or Pile and take our chance, and he that hath the fortune to have both the Boots shall pay the Reckoning; agreed, faid the other, and fo they proceeded; and he whose chance it was to have both the Boots, did not only agree to pay the Reckoning, but also called for another Bottle of Wine. Mine Hoft still kept them company, and helped them to laughat the Frolick, and now they were gotten into fo merry a Vein, they refolv'd to club for the other Bottle, which they likewise in short time drank off. Mine Hosthaving a Design upon them for the Boots, feeing them merry, faid thus, Gentlemen, I made one proposition to you, even now and you agreed upon it; I have another to make, which I queftion not but you will affent to, but in the first place, I pray tell me the just price of the Boots; truly, replyed the Master of them. I was to have fifteen shillings of the Gentleman for them, but they are really worth fourteen shillings, well then, replyed mine Host, my Reckoning comes to fix shillings; now if you please I'le venture my Reckoning, which is near half of what your Boots are worth against them, and fillip up Crofs or Pile whether I shall have the Boots for my Reckoning or nothing; we'l make no dry bargain faid the third perfon, we'l have fome Wine to boot, or no Boots shall be ventured; well, faid mine Hoft, then I will add another bottle of Wine to the Reckoning; and thus all Parties being agreed, Crofs and Pile being fillip'd up, mine Host had his Chance, and the Boots; and thus he gained what the other loft, and neither of the Shoemakers could laugh at one another for their loss was equal; and thus was this pair of liquor'd Boots converted into liquor, and that drank up, and this was the end of the adventure of the Boots for the prefent, but it was not quite finished, for mine Hoft who again had fome business at the Affizes, went to the Country Town where it was kept, and there he met with one of the Shoemakershis Neighbour; he had then the fame Boots on that he had in a manner gain'd by chance; and therefore remembring the Jeft, they went in to drink at the next Two-pot house; there they were jesting and laughing at the paffage of the Boots, when on a fudden mine Hoft looking out of the Window call'd to the Shoemaker, look you here quickly, and I think I can thew you your Boot-Merchant; the Shoemaker look'd out and fawhim, for it was he indeed, with the very Boots on his Leggs; he was walking by, in company of others, who by their Garbs and Mien did feem to be perfons of Quality: The Shoemaker would have run out prefently and feized on him, but mine Hoft would not permit it, only adviting him to follow him, and fee him hous'd; The Shoemaker followed mine Hoft's directions, and faw his Quarters, and upon enquiry found that he was to continue there for fome time; wherefore he returned to mine Hoft, and acquainted him of his intelligence; they thereupon advifed together what most convenient to be done, and concluded that mine Hoft thould go into his company, and acquaint him that the Shoemaker expected fatisfaction for his Boots, and it may be he is a Gentleman of Quality, and only did it in a Frollick, and will now pay well enoughfor it; but, saidmine Host, if I finde him to be otherwife, we can foon have a Warrant to apprehend him, and have him punished; this was reckoned to be fober, and the best advice, and accordingly it was managed; for that evening mine Host seeing him walking alone in the Inn Yard, went and spake to him, telling him if he were not mistaken he thought he knew him; our Gentleman furveying of mine Hoft, reply'd, certainly no, but however if he would go into a Room, he would gladly drink with him; to this mine Hoft confented, they being come into a Room, drank and fmoak'd together; mine Hoft again asking him if he were not long fince at our Town? yes, faid the Gentleman, and I pray you, where did you lodge? at fuch an Inn, reply'd the Gentleman, and naming ours; why then, reply'd mine Host, I am not mistaken, and if you please to call to mind you may remember me to be the Master of the House; Oh! I cry you mercy, reply'd the Gentleman, now I know you, I did partly remember you, but could not call to mind where I had feen you; but I pray what affair has brought you hither? no great matter, reply'd mine Hoft, only a little curiofity; that's well, faid the Gentleman: but, faid mine Hoft, methinks your Boots and mine look as if they were fomewhat of kin together, I pray where did you buy them? Why? that may well be, reply'd our Gentleman, for I bought them in your Town; but Sir, I pray (be not angry) faid mine Host, did you ever pay for them? Why do you ask? faid the Gentleman, because, said mine Host, if you did, then you are slandered and abused, and what if I did not pay for them? faid the Gentleman; why then, faid mine Hoft, you are best to do it, for the men of whom you had them are both my Neighbours; well, well, faid the Gentleman, no more of this, for I paid for them asmuchas I will do: mine Hoft feeing him fo abfolute, faid no more to him of that matter, but drank off their drink, and club'd for their Reckoning, which being paid he again at parting faid thus; Sir, it will be for your Credit to pay for the Boots, I know all the ftory, and if you will not pay now, one time or other you will be forc'd to it to your Coff, and Trouble; do not you trouble your head with that, replied the Gentleman, let it alone till that day comes; take your own courfe faid mine Hoft; and you yours, faid the Gentleman. and fo they parted. Mine Host having had this huffing answer, made further enquiry what this person was, and found that he was no better than a Cheat, and one that came thither for no other purpose, he therefore tells his neighbour the Shoemaker of all paffages, and advifes him to get a Warrant to apprehend him, and carry him before the Judge; He who was forward enough before, now went directly and made his Complaint to the Judge that evening, telling him all the Circumstance of the matter; the Judge asked him if he had enquired what quality he was of! he anfwered, ves, he was suspected to be no better than a Pick-pocket, or Cut-purfe: well then replied the Judge, bring him hither to morrow morning before I go to the Court; our Shoemaker did not fail in a tittle, but the next morning feized on him in his Chamber, and carried him immediately beforethe Judge; when they came there, the Shoemaker made his Complaint, and mine Hoft was there prefent, not only to juffifie it, but to produce the very fellows, which indeed were eafily enough to be known to be fo, and fo they managed their evidence that the Gentleman-Cheat had little or nothing to fay for himfelf, and therefore he wascommitted to Prison. It happened at this time that the Judge had a Kinsman with him who was somewhat wilde, and only rid about the progress with him to fee fashions, and he had one scurvy humor, which was this; he had a good Estate, and was full of mony; and therefore in a prodigal vapouring way, he would carrya Purfe with near a hundred pieces of Gold in it. in his pocket, and this he would always carry about with him, and upon alloccasions, though never so trivial he would be drawing his Purfe, and fhewing his Gold, this was his Cuftom; and the Judge his Unkle knowing it, had oft times chid him for it, telling him that one time or other he would have his Pocket pick'd and lofe it; he would not take any warning, but still replied he would warrant none could pick his pocket, fo that his Unkle the Judge did wish many times that he might lose it; and so be broken of that soolish vainglorious humor. Our Cheat being now in Prison, his Companions, who were all Workmen in the fame Trade, were very much troubled at his lofs, because he would have done them much fervice, and to be fo taken up for fo trivial a matter as a pair of Boots much vexed them, and they knew there was no recovering him without the Judges favour; they therefore refolved to put themselves in the best Equipage they could, and go to him, accordingly that night they went, and told him they were humble Petitioners to his Honour, for a poor friend of theirs whom his Honour had commited about a pair of Boots, and they hoped his Honour would release him; because they very well knew he was wrongfully accused, being a Gentleman by birth, and of a very good House, &c. To this the Judge gave ear, and told them that he very well understood the quality of their friend; and theirs also, but, said he, for once I shall pass by this business upon one Condition; to this they re-ply'd, any Condition he pleased; he then being re-solved what to do, commanded all his Servants and Attendants out of the Room; and told them he well understood their qualities, and had occasion to make use of them in an Affair, telling them that he had such a one his Kinsman, who carried a Purse of money in his Pocket, now, faid he, I would have some of you to follow him, and get it from him, and bring it to me follow him, and get it from him, and bring it to me untouch'd, and then I promife not only to pardon you, but also to deliver your friend to you: They hearing the Judges Proposition, star'd one upon another, not knowing what answer to give, wherefore he again told them that this he expected from them, or else their friend should suffer, they thought sit to answer him with silence, and so departed; when they were gone, they consulted together what was to be done, and believing there would be no great difficulty nor harm in the doing it, resolv'd to effect it accordingly: And therefore the next to effect it accordingly: And therefore the next morning they waited at the Judges Door, and fee-ing his Kinfman, they found means to perform their Enterprize, and got the Purfe of Gold without any confiderable difficulty, and forth-with pretending bufiness to the Judge, they deliver-ed it to him; he nodded them an answer, advising them to come to him in the evening; they did fo, and he gave them a Difcharge for their friend; but that he might do equal juffice, he commanded them to pay the Shoemaker for the Boots, and gave them a piece of Goldtodrink; they very thankfully received it and did accordingly. The Judges Kinfman being now come out of the Court had occasion for moneys, but feeking his purfe found he had loft it; this perplexed him to the heart; but although the losswas confiderable, yet the vexation that his unkle must know it was more; he was exceeding melancholly and discontented; and his Unkle enquired and sent for him, yet he would hardly come into his presence: his Unkle knew well enough what difease he was sick of; but however he asked him again and again what he ailed? and what was the matter? he ftill answered him withfilence, and turning away his head. Supper time being come, they fate down together, but the young man would not eat a bit; what will you eat? faid his Unkle, nothing, faid he: go fetch me a dish of Partridges, faid the Judge; it is a dish I know you love: the meat was brought, but the young man could eat nothing: you shall eat, said his Unkle before you rise, and I will have a dish shall please you; and therefore, said he to the waiters, go bring up the Dish I commanded should be last brought up; they thereupon went down, and brought up a dish covered; come Cousin, said the Old man, eat fome of this; I cannot faid the kinfman, you must and shall, said the Unkle, and I pray uncover the difh and ferve me fome: the young man feeing his Unkle fo importunate, and believing because the dish was covered, that it might be a dish of stew'd apples, refolv'd to uncover the difh, and fatisfie his Unkle by eating a little of that; wherefore at his Unkle's importunity he uncover'd the dish; when he beheld inftead of ftew'd apples there was a better fort of fruit, it was his own Purse of Gold; he no sooner saw it: how, faid his Unkle, I told you I would please you before you did rife from supper, and I think I have done The young man fmiling thanked him, and then reaching to the dish of Partridges, he fell too lustily, and did eat as hearty a meal as ever; thus did the recovery of his Purse of Gold recover his stomack, as indeed I think it would do any others, it being to him and all others as good a Sawce as a Cordial. And now although the young man was well enough pleafed that he had recovered his purfe, yet he was vexed that his Unkleshould thus discover his folly, and studyed how he might be revenged on his Unkle; he knew very well that his purse was taken from him by some cunning cheat, and that by his Unkles confent; and it was not long e're, upon enquiry, he found out the manner, and also the People who did it; he gave them therefore a piece to drink, and told them that he would give them twenty pounds more, if they would do him one piece of fervice; they feeing there was money coming, promifed him to do any thing in their powers; he then told them that it was indeed a high attempt, but he would pay them as largely, and fave them harmlefs; and this it was, he would have them pick the Pocket of the Judge as he fate on the Bench: they told him it was both difficult and dangerous; as for the difficulty, faidhe, I'le make fuch means that one of you shall come near him, and for the danger, I will take of his anger, and payyou as I have faid: to this they at length confented and the next day put in execution; for when the Judge was most busie in examining Witnesses, he that was the Artift that was to perform this, approaches the Bench: the young Man fitting next the Judge his Unkle, beckons the Pick-pocket, and he comes up, and under pretence of whifpering the young man in the ear, he pickt the Old Mans Pocket, and carryed off the Purfe cleverly; when he had fo done he descended, and stood among In thort time after the causes the other Spectators. were heard, and one man who had laid long in prifon, only for his fees, petition'd the Judge to mitigate and leffen them that he might be able to pay them, where's the Jaylor? faid the Judge; here my Lord, faid the Jaylor; what Fees do you demand of this poor man? faid the Judge; twenty shillings my Lord, if it please you, and it is no more than your what Lorship order'd me at the lowest; then said my Lord, you must have fo much; I cannot help it; I must not make Laws one day and break them another, I had rather pay the monev out of my own purse than do so. His Kinsman who fate next him, thought this was a very good opportunity to speak, and therefore thus he faid; May it pleafe honour; I had good Fortune yesterday as your Lordship knows, and therefore am resolv'd to do some charitable Act, and I think this of releasing this poor Prisoner who lies for his Fees, will be none of the least: wherefore whereas your Honor motions paying all this poor mans Fees, I make this offer, that if you please to pay one ten shillings, I will pay the other, that the poor man may be discharged: a very good motion, faid the Judge. The young man foon found the way to his Purfe, and pull'd out an Angel; but the Judge although he fearched both Pockets, could find neither money nor Purse, he was therefore much furprized not knowing what to fay, nor think, but quickly recollecting himself, thus he spake, I am fure, my friends, when I came in hither I had a Purfe of money in my pocket, but now I cannot finde it, he that hath taken it from mewhile I was herefitting, was his Crafts-Mafter, and very bold, but I question not but I shall find him, I have so good skill in Physiognomy, that I know a Knave by his looks, therefore I defire you all there below to look on me, every one did fo, expecting what the Judge would do, who by and by whifpering to the Justice that sate next him, at length arose, and said, look you Master Justice, if I am not deceived, yonder fellow with the straw in his beard hathmy Purfe; all the People stared one upon another, and the Cheat that had the Purfe being conscious of his guilt, doubting he was known to the Judge, and that he had a straw in his beard, he lifting up his hand ftroaked it to wipe it away, supposing by that means to pass undiscovered but that discovered him; for the Judgewhohad a quick eye, and expected that motion, faw, and observed it, thereupon pointed to him, saying, that is he: it was now too late to fly, for the Jaylor foon feized him, and upon fearch found the Purfe in his Pocket. The Purfe was given to the Judge, who told out ten shillings to the Jaylor for the Poor mans Fees, and ordered him to discharge him, and in his Room to take away that bold Delinquent that had pick'd his Pocket; he did fo, neither did his kinfman contradict him in the open Court, but when he came home he told him all the management, and defired a discharge for the Prisoner; the Judge knowing that it was done but in jeft, granted his discharge, and the Kinfmen fent that, and the promifed twenty pounds, and Fees for discharge of the Prisoner.

CHAP. XV.

The Hostes's Daughter being courted by an ignorant poctical Lover; he brings a Soldier with him who becoming intimately acquainted with Mistres's Dorothy relates to her; how he by pretending to be a Cunningman and raising a Spirit, had furnished himself, his Landlord and Landlady with a plentiful Supper, which had been provided at the Cost of another.

Hus did these Cheats make the best of a bad market, for being at the first obstructed in their defigns by their Companions Imprisonment, they were at a loss, and they got little money this bout but what the Judge and his Kinfman gave them, and the people whowere prefent at this bold adventure of picking the Judges pocket on the Bench, were very curious of their own, and for the future had fome what more than ordinary to talk of; but mine Host who knew more of the matter than ordinary, made rare fport with this ftory at his return, and the Shoemaker who hath receiv'd fatisfaction for the lofs of his Boot, having had money for the other, by mine Hosts appointment sent for the other Shoemaker his fellow Tradefman, and ordinary Charges being deducted, gave him the one half; but mine Hoft fo ordered the matter, that as they began, fo they ended in drink, and fpent all they had received at our house, and thus ended the adventure of the boots. Mistress Dorothy now stopping, and we thereby finding that she had concluded her discourse, we took the liberty of laughing, and wondring at what fhe had told us, and therefore defired her to give her felf the trouble to relate some more adventures to us, but she told us in plain terms that she had done, and that we were to expect no more from her. I hearing her fo peremptory in her reply, told her that we had been very much engaged to her, for the extraordinary pains she had taken in these several relations; but yet I must need add this, that as yet she had not fully performed her promise, for she had promised to give us an account of all the family, when as, if I am not mistaken she had said little or nothing of two perfons, whom I supposed to be very considerable, and that was the Son and Daughter; and therefore I made it my request to her, that she would recollect her felf, and relate to us fomewhat of them, because indeed they were a little active while they liv'd at home with their father and mother, but after they went abroad in the world they were very remarkable, (and continued fhe) fince their leaving their father and mother, and my leaving the house were at one and the same time, and one the fame occasion I shall now give you an account of it, and then she thus proceeded.

One young Man and Maid living in a house where fomuch roguery was acted, must needs be well enough experienc'd to act their Parts, but they were fo warily looked after by their Mother, that it was almost impossible to exercise their Talent at home, and the young man by reason of the danger of the War, and least he should be taken Prisoner and served as his Father was, was enforced to keep home and ramble but little, but his Sifter lefs, not being permitted to go any way out of the Town. And although many Guefts who came to our house saw her, and liked her marvelloufly well, (for indeed fhe was handfom) and would have made love to her, yet her Mother knowing the danger by her own experience, watch'd her too narrowly to permit it, and was refolved to use her best endeavor to preserve the Jewel of her daughters maiden-head until fhe should be lawfully She being kept up fo strictly had few Suiters, only one in the Town, who was a Farmers Son had a moneths mind to her, and having read the famous History of Tom Thumb, and from thence proceeding to Fortunatus, and then to the most admirable Hiftory of Doraftus and Fawnia, was infected with Poetry and Love both at once, and abfolutely believing that all he read was really true, did wish himself to be as fortunate as Fortunatus himself, and fince he could not meet with that blind Lady Fortune to prefent him with fuch a Purfe, he did however refolve to be as absolute a loveras Dorastus; and now nothing to that accomplishment being wanting but a Mistrifs who should be his Fazonia, he found out our Pretty Miftress Peggy my Hostes's Daughter (Hers I may boldly call her, but mine Host's I dare not, the Case being doubtful, by what I have already related to you) a Mistress being found for our Swain, he made fomeaddreffestoher, and was permitted by the Mother to more freedom than any, because the youth was not only indifferent handsome, but rich, and mine Hostess was pretty free that they should strike up a match together; I was still defired to keep Company with these Lovers, but I had much ado to forbear laughing outright when I heard his Courtship, all his language was Stuff ftoln out of the books he had read; and when he was answered by Mistress Peggy, or any question propounded by me to him in any ordinary or different Dialect, he was as deaf as a Bell-founder, and was not able to answer us; I being resolved to make sport with him, told him that I thought he would do mainly well if he would apply his fancy to writing of Poetry, and as an effay I advifed him to write a Letter to Miftrefs Peggy in Verfe, he thanked me for my advice, and defir'd my friend-shipand faidthat he would go immediately home and exercise himself in Poetry, and so he faid, and so he did, for behold the next morning Mistress Peggyreceived a Letter from him, which we both read and laugh'd at, for it was so foolishly forced, conceited, and nonsensical that have I much ado to remember the words, but having often repeated them, I shall now relate them to you.

Madam,

E Ver till I faw thee my heart was still at rest, Little did I think one Female could have piere't Either Heart or Bowels, that on thee doth waste, So sad all faint and feeble grow within my brest; Alas, it is pity that forrow to me should come, For to tell you the truth as yet I am but very young, And to express my self I want a better tongue; But I can truly and fadly say that only you Are she that hath brought me to grief and forrow too Brave Vertues that are in this lovely Damsel found At the first sight gave my poor heart a desperate wound. You have my senees very much decay'd With love, that at one time they will be all dismai'd Long of the tender love that to you I do bear, Even now I will make and end my only Dear.

Your true Lover,

L. M.

We all laughed heartily at this non-fenfical ftuff, and I told miftrefs Derethy that fure the was miftaken in the recital of these verses, and that they were to be said backwards, for that wayes that she repeated them I discovered the humour of our Poetical Lover, and Mistress Peggy by my directions returned him this answer.

Amorous Friend,

TIs much you should receive two infections at once, the one Love, the other Poetry, but it is not very strange since they commonly accompany one another. but i'le assure you'tis dangerous, for you know the old Proverb, that fad are the effects of Love and Peafe Porridge; and besides Poetry is commonly attended with Poverty, but after a strict perusal of your poetick Fancies, I find there is no great danger in your poetick infection, for unless you improve your felf mightily it will be a long time e're you be a compleat Poet, and fince your Poetry and Love came together, it will be as long e're you be a compleat Lover; now if you have still a mind to prosecute these two Designs, of Love and Poetry, I advise you to make use of some other more fit and sublime object that may raise your fancy to a higher pitch of eloquence, or at least wife sense, as you have been in verse. I return this answer to you in prose, and as you like this you may prosecute your Designs of Love and Poetry, with some other Object, but I pray give no more trouble to

Your Frind,

M. S.

This to the best of my remembrance was the answer to our Lovers poetical Letter, and although what we writ might have been enough to have dashed the defigns of any other, yet our Lover came very confidently that evening, and thanked his Mistress for receiving his Letter, and answering it; telling her that he did acknowledge he had not as yet any great Skill in Poetry, but he had written his best, and intended and hoped in the next to mend it, and fo he proceeded in his troublefome Love-Suit. Our Cookmaid coming into the room where we were, and having feen the Love Letter, it being made no fecret, told us that fhe had a Love Letter fent her not long fince, which in her opinion was better than that; and we believing that there must be somewhat in it worth the feeing, commanded her to fetch it, and giving it into my hands, I read these words.

Madam,

I Hope the Brains of your Beauty being boy! d in the Kettle of Kindnefs with the Beef of Bounty, may at length prove a dish for my dyet, fo that the Marrove-bone of your Maidenhead being crack'd with the Chopping-knife of my Courage, may upon the Trencher of Truth declare how I love you; let not the mine'd meat of Modesly baked in the Oven of Hatred in the Crust of Coyness cause my Denial, lest the Dagger of Death being drenched in the Barrel of my Blood may with the Spiggot drave forth the Liquor of my Life.

Yours more than his own,

 $T. \mathcal{J}.$

This Letter pleas'd me more than the former, and I told her that her Sweet-heart was ingenious and witty, for he had courted her in her own language, and made use of such words she understood, and that in my opinion it was far better to do so than to be altogether so poetical as to make mocks of their Mistresses by comparing their fore-heads to Alablaster, their eyes to Diamonds, their lips to Coral, and such kind of santastical similies, our Lover was of my opinion, and was so taken with the Cook-maids Letter that he desired to copy it, and so he did; and while he was thus employed, I remembred that I had a paper of verses that would employ all his senses to understand, and it may be puzzle him; and therefore fetch'd it, and he having copyed the other lines, I shewed him these.

I faw a Peacock with a fiery Tail
I faw a Blazing flar that dropt down Hail
I faw a Cloud begirt with Ivy round
I faw a Sturdy Oak creep on the ground
I faw a Pifmire fwallow up a Whale
I faw a brackish Sea brim full of Ale
I faw a Venice glafs fixteen yards deep
I faw a Well full of mens tears that weep
I faw mens Eyes all on a flaming fire
I faw a House big as the Moon and higher
I faw the Sun all red even at midnight
I faw the man that faw this dreadful fight.

And most dreadful it was indeed, said our Lover, if it were true, but however (continued he) the Verses are very good, and I pray let me have a copy of them: which I permitted him to take; and he read them over, and over again without understanding the Mystery, but the more he read, the more he seemed to wonder at the ftrangeness of the several fights, and faid, sure this is impossible, not at all, said I, and if you will layten shillings to be fpent, I will make it out to you before you go, that all that is there written is very true, and that I have feen it all my felf. I cannot believe it, replyed he, and I am content to lay the wager, provided Mistress Peggy may be the Judge. Content, faid I, and fo the money was laid inherhands, and then I took up the paper and began to read thus: I fawa Peacock, and there I made a ftop, and faid, do you believe that? If you do not, I can shew you one in the yard: Ay, but said he, the Verfe is, I faw a Peacock with a fiery Tail, and that is the wager: no, faid I, you must stop when you have red I fawa Peacock, and then go on, with a fiery Tail I fawablazing Star; and I am furethat I have feen that too, for blazing Stars have all fiery Tails: that is true, replyed he, but I did not mean to read it fo: tis no matter how you meant, faid I, but what I read is true, and by vertue of that I suppose I shall win the wager, but however I proceeded, and read; That dropt dozen Hail I faw a Cloud; Begirt with Try round I faw a a flurdy Oak; Creep on the ground I faw a Pifmire, Swallow up a Whale I faw a Brackish Sea; Brim full of Ale I faw a Venice Glass: And so I read on to the end of the Verses, still making a full stop in the middle of the verfe, where the fenfe required it; thus making fense of the impossible nonsense: by this time our Lover faw he was likely to lofe his Wager, but however he cavelled at my thus reading it, and faid, I ought to flop only where the thime ended; but all that he faid fignified nothing, for his Miftrefs did me the juffice to award me the Wager, and accordingly gave me my money, and kept the other twenty shillings to be spent; neither was the Poetical Lover much difpleafed, for he had a very high efteem of the Lines he had, protefling he would not part with them for forty shillings, and he questioned not but he should win much money by Wagers he would lay about them, and being thus fatisfied he left us, promifing the next night to return, and then expecting a Colation for the ten shillings he had loft; and fo we were rid of our poetical Lover till the time appointed; which being come, he likewife came and brought with him a young man, a Soldier that belong'd to the Garrison in our Town; I knew the man by fight, for he was very remarkable, it being the general report that he was a Cunning-man and could tell fortunes, and our Lover brought him to give his oppinion, whether he should have mistress Peggy or not. We gave him the ordinary welcome, he coming in company with our Lover we were the more free with him, who demeaned himself so well that I had a more than ordinary respect for him, and told him he should be welcome at any other time; and fo our Colation being ended, we for that time parted; but in short time after he came again, and being as hefaid, much taken with my company, defired to take all opportunities of waiting on me: I feeing no harm in him, and finding that he was none of the pitifull fort of fellows, but that he was handsom, witty, and above all things that he wore money in his Pocket, permitted him frequently to visit me, and it was not long e're I grew into such familiarity with him, that I obliged him to shew me fo much of his Skill as to tell me my Fortune; he was furprized at this proposition and made many Excuses, but I grew to that height in my importunitie that I wearied him; at length he told me that although all the Townhad been miftaken in him yet I should not, and that if I pleafed he would undeceive me, and in short he told me that it was a miftake to think that he was skillfull either in Aftrology or Magick, and although he had gained fome moneys by pretending to be knowing in that mystery, yet it was no such matter: I supposing that he only said this to excuse himself, still importuned him in such manner, that I brought him to this: that provided I would promise him secrecy, he would discover his whole secrets to me, and thereby make it absolutely appear that the Town was mistaken: I being desirous of hearing Novelties, engaged to perform all he desired, and thereupon he thus began.

Madam, in the discourse I shall make you, I shall be forced to discover not only my own secrets, but also those of another, the most eminent of this Town, and were it not to you, and onely to you, I should not do it for any confideration what foever, for it is the fecrets of a woman of the best quality, and therefore you may be justly angry with me for so doing, but my respects, &indeed my love to you is fo great, that I shall not stop at any obstacles to perform anything you require; & withal I pray do not think, that fince I am fo easie to discover one womans secrets, and that of such eminency and one to whom I am fornuch obliged, that I should, or may at one time or another, ferve you in the like manner. No Madam (faid he) affure your felf of the contrary, for although the woman I am to fpeak of be fo eminent, indifferently handfom, and one to whom I am fo much obliged, yet my acquaintance with her began after a strange manner, and it was a kind of necessity that first induced her to permit me the freedom I enjoy with her; whereas on the contrary, the respects I have for you are of another nature, for my inclination and affection induceme to pay you all manner of fervice, which I am confident will be very lafting He having made this plaufible speech, thus proceeded.

It is not many moneths fince I was first acquainted with this place, you know my quality is a Soldier of Fortune, and I may reasonably enough term my self fo, being of late fome-what favoured by that blind and inconftant Lady; our Commander in Chief thinking it convenient to draw us out of the field wherewe had been all the last Summer, and place us in Garrisons for the Winter feafon; it fell to my lot, among other of my Comrades, to be ordered to be quartered in this Town, where when we came, we had our feveral Billets delivered to us, and mine directed me to the House of the wealthiest Mercer in your Town, where I still Quarter, and who you know is a Person as eminent for Estate, as any in the Town, I need not name him, you knowing where I Ouarter: it fo fortuned, that the night I came thither first to Quarter, he was out of the Town, as he had been for fomedayespaft and was to continue for two or three more. It was fomewhat late when I knock'd at the door, and therefore the Maid-fervant who heard me, ask'd me what I would have? I answer'd that I was appointed in that House to take up my Quarters. The Maid foon called her Mistress, and acquainted her with the matter; which the knowing, thus answer'd me, that she was a young new-married woman, that her Husband was absent, that she had onely one fervant, and that therefore she could not with any conveniency entertain any man in her house. I could not be satisfied with this answer, but reply'd that I was forry I must be so troublesom, but withal that it was too late to feek any other lodging; and that my Coinrades were all in their Quarters, and therefore I must unavoidably lye in the street if shedid not entertainme; wherefore I pray'd her to receive me into her house, and put me into any place she pleaf'd. and I promifed that I would be as little trouble some as possibly I could, and therefore I defired her not todeny that fairly and by entreaty, which she knew I could command. The young woman, although she was much troubled (believing that I might hinder a design she had in hand) yet knowing withal that what I faid was true, and that I might command where I entreated, commanded her maid to open the door, and shew me my lodging up in the Garret. When I was entred the house, I told her that I was to lodge there, so I defir'd I might fup with her, (not that I would command it, but that I would willingly pay for what I had) because it was late, and I had not eaten any thing all that day. She feemed angry at my propofal, telling me that I was miftaken if I took her house for an Inn, and if I wanted a fupper, want I must, for I was like to have nothing there but my bare lodging, and indeed bare I might call it, for it was a most pitiful one, however I was forc'd to make use of it, and go supper-less to bed. Being thus ready to dye for hunger, I had little mind to fleep, and therefore I only tumbled and toffed without fo much as closing mine eyes together. After I had lain an hour in this manner, cafting mine eyes about the Chamber, I perceived some light which came through a Chink or Crevis in the floor, and my curiofity inviting me to it. Heap'dout of the bed, and laving myeye to the place, I might perceive undermearoom very well furnisht, wherein was a great Fire, two Spits, of roafted Fowls, the Maidturning them, and the young Woman, the Miftress fitting in the arms of a young Fellow a Lawyer, who to me appeared to be fo by his Gown. How! faid I to myfelf, is this the Woman that in her Husbands absence will not receive a man into her? Oh the unconflancy and fubtility of Women! this I thought, but however I believed it was not as yet time to fpeak out; but being very hungry, I beheld the Spits with fome anger, and devoured the Fowls with my eyes; I had the patience to fee the Supper dress'd, though I was not to be a Guest; and though I could not tafte, yet I could fmell the Victuals: I faw the Table foread, the Bottles of Wine brought out, & the Victuals placed on the Table, but justasthey were going to fit down, one knock'd at the door; this somewhat startled them, but their confusion was greater, when the Maidasked who was at the door, understood it was her Master. They were all frighted and confounded, not knowing where to put the man, or the victuals, they had but little time to consider: There was but one little Chamber adjoyning where the maid lay, and under her Bed at length they laid him, and the Meat, Drink, and all the Appurtenances were placed in a Closet in the Chamber: This being done, and the Woman fitting down by the fire, the Master who was impatient with calling and knocking, was let in, and coming up stairs, his Wife rifes from her feat, and cryes out, Oh dear Husband! Wellcome home, how glad am I to fee you, especially in coming sooner than I expected. That is true, faid the good man, I made hafte and difpatched my Business, which being done, I took Horfeand made all possible speed to come home to you, and indeed, I have rid full speed all this day; And very welcome you are, faid she: But how come you to have fo great a Fire? faid the Husband: Oh Love, faid the Wife, Iamtroubled with the Belly-ake as passes, and Imade this fireto warm Trenchers and clothes, to put to my Belly to ease me; and truely I think that this pain hath taken me with vexing at a paultrey business that happened this night; for here came a Soldier and faid he must, and would quarter here, and it hath fo angred and griev'd me, to think that a man must lodge here in your absence, that I think truly it hath brought my paine. I hearing this, thought it would be convenient for me ere long to appear, and therefore put on my Clothes, but still I gave attention to the end of their discourse, which was thus continued: Said the Husband, well, let that pass; but I pray let me have some Supper, for I have made fuch haste to day in travelling to come to you, that I am almost dead with hunger, wherefore I pray give me fome Victuals. Victuals, replyed the woman, where do you think I should have it? Do you think I make feafting in your abfence? Alas, my maid and I fupp'd to night with each of us a Roafted Apple, I am forry for that, replyed the Husband, and am very loath if I could help it, to go to Bed without a Supper, but what cannot be cured, must be endured. hearing this, and believing it to be very proper for my defign, being already drefs'd, went down ftairs, and knock'd at the door, which opened, I entred, and faluting my Landlord, prayed him to excuse me for diffurbing his Wife, who had indeed refused to entertain me, till I had acquainted her with my Orders, which, left he should distrust any thing to the contrary, I then pull'd out and fhew'd him, and told him that I hoped his Wife could not complain of any incivility I had offered her. No truly, reply'd fhe. I having fatisfi'd him in this, I told him that I understood that he had not supped no more than I, and therefore if he pleafed I would give him and his Lady a Supper, for I had it in my power to accommodate them very plentifully. How is that possible? reply'd my Landlord, fince it is so late, and nothing is to be had in the Town, and besides that it will be too late to drefs any thing. I bid him take no care for that, but if he pleafed he should be provided with victuals ready drefed provided he and his wife would both promife me fecrefie; they told me that they would do fo, but he wondred, and she seemed to do so too, at what I intended to do; whereupon I told them I had a correspondency with Spirits, who would furnish me with what I defired, and thereupontaking a piece of Chalk, and making a Circle I Placed myfelf in it, made certain Figures about it, and taking a Staff in my hand, waved it about my head, and then I uttered many words which were onely conceited fustian stuff, which they understood not, nor I myself neither, and then proceeding I named a Spirit, and told him that he must quickly provide me a Supper for myself, my Landlord, and his Lady. I feemed to liften, and then told them that my Spirit was obedient, and nothing was wanting now but to know what they would have: I asked the question, but they answered, What I pleafed: Bring then, faid I, a Boyl'd Hen and Bacon, a Couple of Roafted Capons, a Dozen of Partridges, two Dozen of Larks, a Pippin Tart, with Oranges and Lemmons, and Fruit fufficient; Also bring us two Bottles of Canary and two of Claret; this was the Victuals I had feen provided, and therefore this I call'd for; and withal, faid I, I charge thee not to appear in any horrible shape, so as to frighten my Landlord or Landlady, but dispatch quickly and set all down in the Clofet of this Chamber. Having thus finisht my Inclination and paused a little, now, faid I, open the door and there you shall see I am obeyed. The maid readily did as I commanded, and all was there in ample manner ready drefs'd, to the great aftonishment of my Landlord, but my Landlady, though she feem'd to be a mazed, knew well enough that fhe was discovered, but as yet could not disaprove of what I haddone. The meat being produced, the Table was spread and the provision placed thereon, and now all things being in readiness, I defired my Landlord and Landlady to take their places; at my request they did fo, but my Landlord was mighty unwilling to eat, until he see me eat and commend the Victuals and Sauce, and I importuning him to tafte, he did fo, and my Landlady by his example confented to accompany us in the fame employment: Having now done with one Dish, and my Landlord finding that to be good, by my example fell to another, and though he was fomewhat cautious, yet he made a good Meal; I am fure I did not spare, but fed like a Farmer, and my Landlady was not at all behind hand, the well enough knowing, that though I told them it was drefs'd under ground, yet she could contradict me but she durst not; the maid had her part too, and all were well enough content, except the poor Lawyer, who was both hungry and fearful, left as I had discovered the meat, I would also discover the Caterer, but I minded no fuch matter, I thought as I had begun well, fo to end, and I would not be fo difcourteous to him to make him fare ill, when by his means I had fared fo well. We not onely eat luftily, but drank off our our Wine cheerily, which was as good as ever tipp'd over Tongue, and for us three there was enough; and now at last my Landlord did own that the Meat and Sauce. Bread and Drink were all excellent good, and that if the Spirits could command fo good Fare, they were more harmlefs and better company than he thought for: I told him my Spirit was still in his house, and expected my further Commands, therefore I defired to know whether he would have ought elfe e're I discharged him? He told me, No: Then, replyed I, he shall defeend; but fince he hath done us fo good fervice, I will, if you pleafe, let you fee him. Oh by no means Sir, faid my Landlady, fearing I would discover her greatest Secrets.

Rest contented, replyed I, for I am Master of more discretion that to disoblidge a Lady; assure your felf it shall be otherwise than you imagine: my Landlord too was very fearful, but I affured him there should be no cause, and thereupon for the more easie management of what I intended, I ordered the Servant-maid to open the Street door, and all the other Doors of the House, that the Spirit might have the more freedom to depart, otherwife I told them he would raife a Tempest; and, continued I, he shall not appear in any horrid form, but in the habit of one of your Neighbors; having told them this, I thus began: Oh thou Spirit, who hast been unexpectedly diffurbed, but haft fo plentifully catered for us, come forth for I now give thee leave to go whither thou pleafest. The Lawyer who was but in the next room, and who had heard all paffages, was not fo fottish as to neglect this opportunity, but pulling his Hat over his face that he might go undifcovered, came forth of the room where he had been hid, and with a fteady pace walked by us, going down stairs, and so leaving the house, whilft my Ladylady in a trembling manner fate and beheld what had paffed.

CHAP. XVI.

The Souldier is indanger to be caught by his Landlord in his Landladies Chamber, but by her wit he efeapeth. Mistris Dorothy relates that a parcel of Padders having rob da Knight of four hundred pounds, two of them are taken, but the Knight will not swear absolutely against them, because he might sue and get his Money of the Hundred where he was rob d. A Crew of Pick-pockets wanting money, two of them pretend to be drunk and quarrel with the third, where fore the set was rout into the slocks, and getting company, the third had the opportunity of picking many Pockets.

The Lawyer having thus pass'd by us to the amazement of my Landlord, he then look'd on me with fomewhatadiftracted countenance, his wife feeing that, and doubting that he had or would difcover the matter; to divert him from any questions or considerations, pretended to be fo mightily amaz'd & frighted, that the fell into a fwoon, and then her Husband, the maid, and I had enough to do to bring her again to her felf, neither could we do it fowell, but that her Husband was forced to help the maid to carry and put her into herbed, where forthat night Heft them and went to my own, and now my belly being full it was not long ere I fellafleep; awaking the next morning I began to confider what had paffed, and wondred at my felf how I had the confidence to manage an affair fo difficult and dangerous, but when I confidered what I had done I refolved to proceed, and as I knew the fecrets of my Lanlady, tomake forecufe of that knowledg, and out of her misfortunes to make my felf a fortune therefore I recommended my felf, remembring the old faying, Audaces Fertuna juvat, Fortune helps the bold, and therefore I would try her favours, confidering that the could do me no injuries, I could not be much lower than I was, and I was in great probability torife higher by the profecution of this Adventure. I did not question but I should do well enough with my Landlady, for I had not at all disobliged her in betraying her fecrets, but rather mannaged them as well as she could wish or defire, and therefore she could not take me for a Clown or Fool, but rather think me worthy of her favour, and into her favour I was refolved to get, or venture all; she was young, and as you know indifferent handsome, her husband was old, and I believe wanting in what most pleases a woman, and therefore the had permitted the young Lawyer to supply that Defect, and confidering that I might as well as he pretend to her favor, for I was as young, and (if I am not miftaken) as handfom; indeed he had this advantage, of having more money than I, but I question'd not but she would well enough dispense with that, she being out of possibility of wanting any, but rather able to fupply me; and I had this advantage above him, that I was in the house, and likely for some time to continue there, and by that means I might make use of all opportunities, and indeed it was not long ere I had one; for I having spent good part of the morning in these congitations, I could hear my Landlord rife andgo out of the house, wherefore I also arose and made my felf ready, and indeed I fpruced my felf up in the best manner I could; being now ready I went down stairs, and met with the Maid-fervant, who could not look on me without blufhing, I gave her the Good morrow, &askedherhowher mittress did this morning fhe replyed, fomething better than I left her last night. Truly replyed I, I am forry that the was foill, but more especially to consider that I had been the occasion of it, but I would study how to make her amends. & at prefent

I defired to make my excuses to her, if the would show where fhe was: fhe is not yet stirring, faid the Maid; that matters not, faid I, and thereupon we went to her bed fide; where when I was come, the feeing me turned away her face: but Madam, to make short with my ftory, I spake to her, and that in such manner, that she not only turned about, but gave me thanks for the favors I had done, in managing her fecrets with fo much difcretion, and that the was, and thould be eternally obliged to me, and should study how to make me amends: I replyed, amends was already made in the good opinion fhe had for me, defiring her to continue in it, and I should endeavour to serve her in all things to my power; and fince it was her misfortune to be difturbed by her Hufbands unexpected return, and be difapointed in the enjoyment of her Friend, that was a thing I could help, but however, if the pleafed to accept of me in his ftead, I should give her the best fatisfaction I could, she seemed to be angry at this proposal, but I proceeding and telling her that I was a Gentleman born and bred, and it may be in all things equal, if not above her Friend: she was content to let mekifs her, and I finding that I might without much difficulty proceed further, fent the Maid out for a Mornings draught, and in her absence perswaded her to accept of that from me which the flould have had from her Friend the Layer, had not her Husband difturbed them; and I then pleafed her well, that ever fince the hath made no difficulty tolet meenjoy her Person, and be Mafter of that as well as I was of her fecrets; and being thus pofferfed of her perfon, I not only commanded that but her Purfe, and have led the pleafantest life in the World. This Adventure, Madam was the occasion of my being accounted a Cunning-man, for my Landlord, though I had enjoyned him fecrefic, yet he did not absolutely keep it, but acquainted some of his familiar friends with my knowledg, fo that I was in fhort time pointed at as I passed along the street, and gazed at with the eyes of wonder; nay some of the Neighborhood courted me very earnestly to answer them feveral questions, and being often importuned, did give them fuch answers as might probably come to pass. which falling out accordingly I gain'd not only the reputation of a cunning man, but my pockets were alfo indifferently well lyned with Half-crown pieces. Thus had I a handsome enjoyment of money and pleasure: for I was free with my Landlady, and very little fufpected by her Husband; but I was one time near being caught by him, and thus it was. He was not only well ftricken in years, but by an accident fome years past, had loft one of his eyes, or elfe he would have efpyed us; for one day he being abroad, and I being defirous to toy with my Landlady, we in order thereto entred her Chamber and lay down on her bed, we had not long been there but we heard a noife, and the maid-fervant looking to fee what was the matter, came hastily in to us, and told us that her Master was coming up stairs; fhe had hardly delivered this unpleafant meffage, but he was come up ftairs and was entring the Chamber, but he was not foguick, but his wife and I were as nimble, and were got upon our feet, and the running to the door caught hold of her Husband about the Neck and cryed out, Oh Lord Husband, how dearly welcome you are to me! especially at this time, when I so longed to see you. For what cause, said my Landlord? what is the meaning of this language? Ohdear Husband, replyed fhe, I have been afleep on the bed, where I had the pleafantest Dream that I have ever had in all my life; nay, (continued she) it is more than a Dream, for it is a Vision, and I hope a true one: well, what is it, said he? Why truely Husband, faid fhe, methoughts you and I were walking along together in a pleafant Field, and we met with a man that begged an Alms of you, which you very liberally gave him, and he being glad of your liberality told you, that he would recompense it by restoring you the sight of your other eye: Methoughts I wasvery joyfull at this proposition, and defired him to do it, but you were doubtfull of his performance, and therefore unwilling to let him meddle with you, but he promifing and affuring us that he would certainly cure you, I perswaded you to permit him to wash your eye with a certain Water he had in a Viol about him, which he had no fooner done, but methoughts you faw very well with your blind eye, at the fight of which I was fo over-joyed, that I awaked, and you then came up flairs; and now Sweet-heart I am fo confident of the Truth of my Dream, that I defire to experiment the fame, and therefore I praylet me put my hand on your feeing Eye for a tryal. My Landlady having done, her Husband replyed, Surely you have not been afleep as you fay, but talk idly for want of fleep, or elfe you would never make fo foolish a proposition. I know not, reply'd flie, but I must needs defire you to give me fatisfaction in this particular, for I long to try Well, faid he, that you may fee how much a fool you are, I am content. She having liberty, clapt her hand on his feeing Eye, and I who waited that opportunity needed no further inflructions what to do, but coming from behind the door where I had flood, with long firides and eafic, went out of the Chamber, and going down thairs left the Houfe: She feeing me gone, and thereby her bufinefs being done, askedher Husbandii he faw any thing? No, faid he, but if you will remove your hand I shall see a fool; the did so, and told him that the was fatisfied, but hoped it had been otherwife: And thus, continued the Soldier, we escaped this brunt, as we did many others. And now Madam, faid he to me, I have been very free in relating to you the greatest Secrets of my life, having so much confidence in your discretion, that I shall run no hazard in your knowing it, but hope as I have been free with you, fo you will be fo generous as to acquaint me with your quality and condition, and permit metoferve you in all Ican. To this request I answer'd, That indeed I was not of that Countrey, but another, and upon an urgent affair was sometime since come from London, whither I have a defire to return; fo have I, faid the Soldier, and if you please to accept of my service, I shall gladly wait on you thither, for I have fo much respect from my Captain, that I question not but he will not onely give me leavetogo, but alfogive me a Passto fecure me thither. I hearing him fay fo, told him that I would take fuch order in my affairs, that I hoped in one months time to be ready to be gone, and then I should be glad of his Company. This was the discourse I held with the Soldier, who was indeed very civil with me, fpending his money freely as often as he came into my company. I being resolved to leave this place, took order to get into my hands what moneys I had, which I had lent out to fufficient persons in the Town, which was in short timepaid me; but very strange Accidents happened in our house before my departure, which made me hasten it, and which were thus: I have already told you that our house had been a Receptacle for Cheats and Pickpockets, who by degrees coming to be Thieves and High-way-men, they still frequented it, and mine Host who feeing he gain'd moneys, cared not much which ways he came by it, made no great fcruple of Confcience to entertain them, who indeed were very good Customers, and spent equal to the best Guests we had, and he might do that with them he might not with others, for they were bound to believe and pay all that he reckoned, although never fo unreasonable, fo that he had an equal fhare, if not more, of all the Prizes they made, fome whereof were very confiderable; for a Knight of Yorkshire having occasion to travel our Road was fet upon and rob'd by fix of our Guests, he had onely Himself, Wife and Daughter, Coachman, and one Horfeman, this was his Company, but the Prize was confiderable, being four hundred pounds in money, besides Watches, Rings, and other Jewels: Our Crew of Padders, although at first they were fevere enough in fearthing them, and ftripping them of all their Money and Jewels, yet dealt civily enough with them (if I may term Thieves to be fo) before they parted, for the Knight feeing it was invain to refift, and being too weak to do fo, permitted them to take all from him, but when they came to his Lady and had taken her little Money, and proceeded to take her Ringsfromher Fingers, he was troubled, and told them, that he hoped as they had found him civil to confefs and deliver all he had to them, and which he faid was very confiderable, fo he hoped they would not use any violence to his Wife and Daughter, in taking their Ringsfrom them which were inconfiderable, and might happen to be prejudicial to them, in difcovering of them to the Law. They, who knew he faid right, not onely defifted from proceeding against the Ladies, but also gavehimhis Watch and Rings and all the odd Money they had taken from him, contenting themselves only with the four hundred pounds, and giving him an Oath that he, nor none of his company thould remove from that place for half an hours time, that they might have leifure to escape; they left him. He was as good as his word and staid out his time, and they

with full fpeed rode to our Town, and at our house took up their Quarters: They no fooner entred the house, but they first deliver'd their Money to the custody of mine Host, and then called for a Trunk wherein was their Clothes, for they had always Change of Clothes lay there, fo that in a quarter of an hours time these fix Blades of Fortune were so metamorphofed that they were not to be known; he who when he came in had a black Perriwig and grey clothes, now had a white Perriwig and black Clothes, and by that and pulling off Patches and fuch like Difguisements, they were not to be known: for if a Hucand Crycoms out wherein is named the number of the Robbers, they cannot diftinguish or describe them otherwise than by their Clothes and Horses; and as for their Habits they thus alter them, and their Horses are presently either fent to Grafs, or lock'd up in a private Stable, and their SadlesandotherAccoutrementsareconvey'dawayand lock'd up; and commonly if there be fix or eight in a Robbery, not above the one half, or three quarters of them go to one house, but divide themselves into Companies untill the Hucand Cryshall be over, and then they meet and divide the Booty: This is their common practice when a Robbery is done at any diftance from London, butifit be done within twenty miles of that place, then away they all flie thither, and enter the City at feveral ends of the Town, and to feveral Quarters they at prefent disperse themselves; this I say is their cuftom. I told Miftress Dorothy that I was very well acquainted with the Truth of what she had said, and therefore defired her to proceed and acquaint me how their Guefts came off with their Prize: Very well. faid she, for the Hue and Cry came not to our Town till the next day; and by that time two of the fix were gone, having taken their shares with them, and the Hue and Cry having passed about the Town it came to our house, where the Officers failed in their Enquiry, for it nominated fix, whereas our Company was but four, and the Description of the Persons and their Habits was so different from what our Guefts had, that there was no reason in the world to suspect them, and as for their Horses they were not to be found, fo that, I fay, our Guests all efcaped, and for joy feafted and drank very highly, but in two days time their Joy was leffen'd; for a trufty Meffenger came to them and brought fad Newes from the other two of their Companions, which was, that they were taken, apprehended, and upon examination found fo guilty, that they were fent to Goal. Guefts were very much furprized at the news, & upon examination of the perticulars, thus they found it: The Knight who was robb'd having ftaid in the place the time he promifed, that being over, he caufed his Coachman to drive on to the next Town, where when he came, he fent for the Town-Officers, and inform'd them of his Lofs, and withal told them that he must, and did expect fatisfaction from them, and the rest of the Inhabitants of that Hundred, because he was robb'd two hours before Sun-fet: They who heard him knew he faid right, and that it must be so, unless they produc'd all or fome of the Felons, and had them try'd and found guilty at Law, wherefore the Sum being confiderable, and the Case so evident and plain to be proved, they prefently took an account of the Knight of all particulars of the Robbers in the best manner that he or his fervants could direct, and having fo done sent out a Hue and Cry, directing and charging the Officers to use all possible diligence in the discovery of these Fellons: but they miss'd of their purpose for that day, but the next it was the misfortune of those two of our

Guefts who had left our house to come thither, and being now again upon the Pad, were accoutred in their Padding Habit; although they were but two. and the number in the Hue and Cry was fix, yet their Habits and Horses were so remarkable that they were foon suspected, and the officers feized them quickly. hailing them before the Justice, whither when they were come and examined, they could not answer so well, but that they were shrewdly suspected; but to make the matter more clear, the Knight and his fervants who were still in the Town, were sent for, and then it was not long ere thematter was but too plain for our two Delinquents, especially when upon fearch of their Portmantua's their share of the Money was found, however they stoutly denied the Fact; but notwithstanding all that could be faid, they were fent to Prifon. This News alarmed our Guests, and made them bethink themselves of what should be most necessary for their own prefervation, and thereupon they thus refolved, that two of the four should go near the place where the Knight was, and observe his motions, and according to that act their matters as should be convenient, and the other two refolved for the prefent to flay at our house: but this Case which now at the beginning appeared to be very bad and fad for their two Companions, in the end by the cunning managment of the two Agents came off much better than was expected, and indeed very well; for they underflanding that the Knight was engaged by the Justice to profecute, and that the Countrey would fee that he should do fo, whereby they might be discharged from payment of the money he was robb'd off; This confideration being had, they resolved by some trusty Messenger to fend to the Knight, and therefore they drew up a Letter to this purpose,

Hat they were Gentlemen of a good Extraction, but the misfortunes of times, and their own Necessities, had put them upon a Courfe of life far different from their Inclinations; which, although it was not justifiable by Law, yet they thought it not fo unreasonable as the World did, and they had plenty of Examples for their Practice, the whole Nation being now engaged into Parties, who under fair and specious pretence made it their business to Rob (which they termed Plunder) one another, especially the harmless Countrey, and that so often as they should come in their way: This they faid was the prefident by which they walked, and by vertue of this Commission (which they believe as Authentick as some of theirs who levyed great Forces,) they had taken up Arms, and their good fortune, and this present mishap, had caused them to meet, where, although he was dispossest of his Money, yet they were confident he had no very ill opinion of them, in regard they had used him and the Ladies in his company with all civility; this they hoped he would not forget, and for that confideration he would dealas civilly with their two Companions, who had the misfortune to fall under the power of the Law. This they thought was reason enough for them to Expect all favourathis hands, but therewere alfo other reasons for him to do it, and that which they thought would be the most prevalent, was, that it was against hisowninterest to prosecute their Companions; for should he at the approaching Assizes so absolutely charge them with the Fact, as to bring them within the compass of the Law, and it may be take their Lives from them, then he must expect no other fatisfaction, but lose his Money: whereason the contrary if he and his fervants fpake doubtfully in their Evidence against them, and they were not proved to be guilty, then he might by Law recover his whole Money of the Country. This they hoped would be a prevalent reasonwith him to order thematter so as to let their Companions escape, which they prayed & hoped he would do: but if (as they thought against all reason) he should rigorously prosecute them, he was to remember that four of their Companions were still left at liberty with swords in their hands, and his misfortune might again bring him under their power, when he might not expect so civil proceeding against him as he had the last time, but that they might revenge their Companions, but they concluded they hoped he would not give them that occassion.

And fo they concluded.

This Letter was carefully conveyed to the Knight, who having read and confider'd the Contents, and finding their reasons to be good, and withal considering that if he should by his Evidence cast these two men for their Lives, he was not fure of his own fo long as they had companions, (who though at the first he found civil enough) who had fwords in their hands, and might be revengeful and bloody-minded enough on that occafion; neither, as they had urged, would it be for his interest, for he must then lose his Money, or the greateft part. These reasons, I say, madehim to manage the matter fo as that upon Tryal they should be acquitted, and therefore he fent to the Prison a Confident of his, to tell them that he would do fo, charging them to deny the Fact & standupon their justification; And thus the Affizes coming they were indicted, but the Knight & his Servants (who were directed and instructed by him) were all in one Tale, & faid, that indeed he was robb'd of fourhundred pounds at fuch a place & time, by fix men, two whereof were in fuch habits, or like fuch as the prifoners at the Bar had, but that he could not for all the world fwear or fay that they were any of the persons. He faying no more than thus, and by his example his Servants faying no more or lefs, & the Prifonerspleading Justification, they were in the end acquitted, had their Money again deliver'd to them, and the Knight now proceeding in his Suit against the Country, recover'd his whole Moneys of them; and thus our two Prisoners with their two Comrades who had attended the Tryall, came home to our house with great joy. And thus did Thieves escape, and the honest Countrey was punish'd, and this I have known is a trick that hath been used familiarly; so that several Countreys have been almost undone with these kind of Robberies.

Soon after this passage, there happened one as pleafant, thought not fo roguish, and thus it was: A Crew of Divers, Bung nippers, or Pick pockets came to our house, and there being a Fair in the Town they brought homevery good Purchafe, and spent their moneys very freely, but their trade did not continue fo good as it began, and they in expenses were fo profuse and prodigal, that they had out-run the Constable, spent more than they were able to pay, and they were always us'd to pay their Hoft well, and fo they were refolv'd to do now, or fet their Wits on the Tenters; many Projects they had, and many Effays they made, fome of them going abroad by turns, and then returning and fending others, but our Town was but thinly peopled, and they could not raife any confiderable Purchase, wherefore knowing that if they could get any number of people together, they might then have the more convenient opportunity of getting a Prize, they therefore thus laid their Plot; Three of them went out, two whereof were to act the drunken mans part, and fo they did very Comically, for they reeling along the streets, tumbled down feveral people who were in their way. The people believing them to be what they appear'd, vis., drunk, let them pass on without much interruption; their fober Companion feeing that no body elfe would take them up, he therefore was refoly'd todoit, and thereupon meeting them as by chance, they gave him the Justle, which he not taking so patiently as the other had done, not onely worded it with them, but they proceeded to blows, fo that two being against one it was thought unequal, and they having been abusive to others, a great company were assembled, and among them the Constable, who seizing upon all three carried them before a Justice, who hearing the matter, and finding by the testimony of the people who went with them, that the two were wholly to blame, and believing them to be as drunkasthey feemed to be, he therefore ordered that they should be set in the Stocks for two hours, and the third be discharged. This his Order was obeyed, and they were conducted to the Stocks, where they behav'd themselves so pleasantly in foolish discourse to the people, that a very great number of people were about them; their Companion who was at freedom feeing his conveniency, and being his Arts-Mafter in the Mystery of Diving, fished money out of their pockets, so that in two hours time that they were in the Stocks, he plyed his work fo well that he had gained near feven pounds; being thus fraighted, he came to our house, and it was not long ere his Companions followed him; when they finding fo confiderable a Purchase, paid my Landlord the Reckoning and call'd for a new one, where they drank roundly, remembring all those by whom they fared the better; and then having done the business they came for, they paid their Shot and march'd off to the next Town to fee if they could fare any better than they had done at ours. And these, continued Mistress Dorothy, were the Guests we now entertained, Padders and Pick pockets, who as they got their money eafily, fo they fpent it as lightly, to the great profit of mine Hoft, for he gained at least fifty pounds of the four hundred, and still put in for a share: but as the Pitcher goes not so often to the water, but it comes home broken at last, so in short time not onely his Guests, but he himself was caught and brought to condign punishment.

CHAP. XVII.

The Author relates a Story how he and fix other Padders robb'd a Carrier of fix hundred pounds, and that one of the company in consideration of an hundred pounds paid him by the Countrey where the Robbery was committed, owned the Fact, and thereby faved the Countrey (who were fued) from payment of the rest, and at length by their assistance gained his pardon. Also how a young Pick-pocket is put on by an old one, to cut an old womans Purfe whileft she is at prayers in a Church-yard by a Tombstone; the Boy performs the Exploit, but is difcover'd and thew'd by the old pick-pocket to the people, who coming to stare on the Boy had their Pockets pickt by the old one and his companions; And also how an old Padder being in danger to be hang'd for a Robbery, a young one for fifty pounds took the Fact upon himself, discharged the old one, and in the end came clearly off himfelf.

I Finding by Mistress Dorothy's pausing that she was fomewhat weary of her large Discourse, and being desirous to know the conclusion of her Adventures, desired her to refresh her fell with a Cup of Wine which stood by us, and then we all three, viz., Mistress Mary, Mistress Dorothy, and my felf, having drank off a quart of the best, I thus bespake her; Truly Mistress Dorothy, you have taken much pains in reciting these pleasant adventures that befel whil'st you liv'd in the Inn, and you must needs have very great experience by what you have related; for although I was well acquainted with knaveries and rogueries enough whileft I lived in England, yet all our adventures are very new, being such whose like I have feldom heard; and although I did follow the Padding-Trade, especially at that time when I had the good fortune at the first to meet with, and be acquainted with you, yet I feldom knew, nor indeed ever heard of the like escape that your fix Padders had; it was a neat and cleanly conveyance: but left you should be tyred with too long speaking, and that I might enable you the better to give us a full and exact account of the rest of your adventures, I will relate to you fome of my former Adventures, and especially one, which was fomewhat like that of your fix Padders, and thus it was.

A flout gang of us who were Knights of the Road, were one time affembled together at an Inn, from whence we understood a good round Sum of money was to be carryed, and we only waited the departure and motions of the Pack-horfes, that we might put our project in execution, the Sum was fix hundred pounds, and we knew it was to be carried in a pack, but which pack and which horse was to carry it, we were ignorant of, and that we doubted would be a hindrance or at leastwife a trouble to our design; for the Carrier having fuch a charge of money was refolv'd to travel only by day light, and not in the night time, whereby if it should happen he were robb'd, he might not bear the lofs; and we knowing this, and doubting that he would keep in as much company as he could, wefear'dit would be trouble some and dangerous to rob him of that money, unlefs we knew in what pack it was; for it would take up much time to cut up and examine all the rest of the Packs, which were near twenty in number : wherefore one of our Comrades made it his bufinefstodifcoverthat matter, but although he was watchful, yet the Carrier and Owners were as shie, so that he could not possibly attain to his defires; wherefore he was refolv'd to under-feel the Hoftler, who upon a little acquaintance and a Reward given him, and more promifed if the project should take, engaged to give hima certain Token how he should know the Horse and Pack, and to that end directed him to wait the next morning early when the Pack-horfes went out: Our Companion did fo, fitting in a Drinking-room in the Yard where he could fee all paffages. The Horfes being loaded, went out one after another, and the Moneyed-horfe in the middle, when he came the Hoftler lifted up his hand, and gave him a Clap over the Buttock, faving, Goe thy ways Dun, for thou wilt never be fold to thy worth: This was Item enough to our Companion to mark, and know what he had to do; fothat the Horfes being allgone, and he having difpatcht his drink, came up to us who attended him; And then he telling us that he knew how to execute our Defign, and that he had knowledge enough, we refled contented, neither did we leave that Inn till noon, although the Carrier went out in the morning early, and this we did that we might not be suspected to have any design upon him, but foon after we had din'd we all mounted and away we rode. It was not many hours before we over-took the Carrier, or at least came near him, and then we fent one of the company to fcourthe Road, and discover in what condition the Carrier was in, and as occasion fery'd to come back to us and acquaint us; one hour before night he came to us, who were not far ou, and told us, that then was the opportunity, for the Carrier had engag'd company all the while before, but now the night coming on, and the Company being to travel further than the Carrier, they had newly left him, and then he was alone, onely with his man and two or three passengers; we being eight in number, quickly made up to the Carrier, and one with Sword drawn and Piftol cock'd feiz'd on him, another on his man. and the rest of our Companions on the rest of the Pasfengers; he of our Companions that knew the Horfe and Pack onely went to him, fingl'd him out, cut his Girts, ripp'd up the Pack, and took forth the money, without medling with any thing elfe; we the rest of his Companions in the mean time had difmounted the Carrier, his man, and the Paffengers, and having tved their hands, we left them to shift for themselves, and fix of us taking each of us a hundred pounds, and the other two riding one in the Van, and the other in the Rere, away we march'd, but at that rate that in two hours we were got thirty miles from the place where the robbery was committed, and we had fo cross'd the Country to prevent discovery, that it was almost impossible to overtake or finde us. We took up our Ouarters at an Inn where we were very well acquainted, and for joy of our purchase wanted for nothing that money could produce us, and there we fpent fome time in all manner of delights, till being weary of the place, and fome of the Company having a defire to depart and separate, we accordingly did fo; and one of our Companions who had occasion to ride that way where we committed this Robbery performed one of the boldest exploits that I have ever heard of, and thus it was.

He had an Uncle who kept an Inn in the Town near to the place where this Robbery was done, to whose house he came & was welcom'd; he pretended he was a Soldier, and was newly come from the Garrison at Briftol, and with fuch kind of imaginary Stories he discours'd his Uncle, and telling him the best news he could, and his Uncle likewife acquainted him with the news of the Town, and as the chiefest told him that there had lately been a great robbery done, for a Carrier was robb'd of fix hundred pound, and therefore it being done in the day time, that Town must pay for it, and truely Coufin, faid he, our Town hath been fo mightily peftred with Soldiers that we are very poor and not able and my share comes to thirty pound of themoney: but faid our companion, can you not meet with the thieves? no replyed his Uncle; we have offered a hundred pound, to any that can discover them, but hitherto all hath been in vain. This was the Hofts discourse with his Kinsman, who very well knew he was one of the number; and a conceit came into his head, that it was possible that as he had got almost a hundred pounds already by this robbery, so he might get another whole hundred pounds; and therefore being refolved what to do, he thus difcovered himfelf to his Uncle: it is now faid he, three years fince I left my Father, and ever fince that I have led a troublefome life, fo that I am almost weary of it; and it is not long fince that for a mifdemeanor I had done in our Garrifon, I was condemned to be hang'd, but I thank my flars I efcaped it, and being fo near death and efcaping, I foon after came acquainted with a cunning man, who telling me my Fortune, told me that I had lately escaped a danger, which I very well knew; and he withal added, that I should run into many other dangers, and thould escape them; and that he was certain I was not born to be hang'd: and now therefore Uncle faid he, I will once again tempt my fate, and being affured that I shall not be hang'd, I care not, if I may be enfured the hundred pounds you spake of, if I take upon me and own the Robbery; and I think it will be no difficult matter to do, for as I remember one of the Gentlemen Padders who did that feat was habited and mounted just as I am. His Uncle having heard his discourse, stared at him, and asked him if he were mad? no, replyed he, but if you will warrant me the money I'le undertake the matter: his Uncle feeing him thus refolved, began to confider a little more feriously of the matter, and told his kinsman, that if he would do the one, he would not only ensure him of the other, but also endeavour his pardon, and thereupon he fent for fome of the Neighbors whom he might trust; and told them that there was a wild young man his kinfman, who would fave them five hundred pounds, and told them the manner how, they were well enough fatisfied with the proposition, and not only promifed him the money which was agreed on, should be presently put into any friends hand, but also that they would undertake his pardon, or at least-wife a reprieve that he might sue out hispardon; this being agreed upon, they next proceeded in their discourse how this affair was to be managed, and after feveral propositions made, it was concluded, that as he came into the Town, so he should go out, and the next day he should re-enter the Town when the Officers who should be then appointed to search for suspitious perfons should feize on him, and he should at the first deny the fact, but upon examination should so vary and waverin his difcourfe, that he should give just cause of fuspition; they having agreed on this, and several other particulars, and the money being deposited in a young maidens hand, who was his Uncles Daughter; he took horse and privately left the Town. The next day the Officers of the Town being charged to keep ftrict watch, and fearch all fuspitious places; they did fo, and as they had been a little way out of the town, and were returning our Adventurer overtook them; who rides here fays one, fure that man is cloathed just as the Carrier described one of the Padders were? he hearing them fay this, made fome stand, and offered to turn his back, they therefore imagining that he might be suspected, asked of him what he was? and came near to encompass him, he still withdrawing drew his piftol and fired at them, they then flaring on each other, and feeing that none of their company was kill'd or wounded, were encouraged to make up to him; and although he drew his fword yet they being armedadventured upon him, and feizing on him, pull'd him from his horse back, he then asked them, what was the matter, and what they would have? they told him that he was a high-way man, and that they were very certain of, or elfe why did he shoot at them, and were glad they had caught him, he should pay for all the trouble he had put the Town to; fome railed at him in this manner, whilft others difarmed him and bound his hands together, and then they led him away to the Town, where with great noise they carried him before their Justice of the peace; he strictly examined him and absolutely charged him with the former Robbery, advising him to confess, and inform against his companions, and then he told him he would endeavour togethim apardon: our adventurer gave him the hearing of all, but denyed all knowledge of the robbery, but to faintly and with fuch faultering and uncertainties, that the Juffice committed him to prison. In few dayes after the Carrier came that wayes, and he was conducted to the Thief, were after a light fight and discourse with him, he and his servant remembred him, and the Owner of the money was fent for who was also carried before the Justice; and there he, the Carrier and his Servant were all bound to profecute the Felon, which was much in the vexation of the owner of the moneys, who expected the next affizes to have a tryal against the Town, and to recover his money of them, whereas now he faw he was like to lofe that, and only have an Endictment against the Felon, when as if he should find him guilty, it would be a little satisfaction for such a fum of money as he had loft. And as he expected, and as the plot was laid, fo it fell out; for the Affizes being come, an Endictment was brought in against our Delinquent, and although he buss'ld to defend himself, yet he was found guilty, and then he made an ingenious consession to the Judge of the manner of the Robbery, only concealing as much as he thought convenient, alleadging that indeed he was guilty. but it was his first fact, but he was drawn in by chance being overtaken on the way by the Robbers; he being coming to the Town to vifit his Unkle, and therefore he pray'd mercy of the court, the Judge told him that if he would discover his companions fomewhat might be done, but not elfe, he replyed, that truly he was not in their company, above eight and forty hours in all, and therefore knew not of their haunts, but if his honor would spare his life he would if ever he met them, cause them to be apprehended; to this the Judge made no Answer, so that our Adventurers Uncle presented a Petition to the Judge in behalf of his Kinf-man, and the other Chief men of the Town pretending for his Unkles fake to do fo affifted him in it, and they drew the Petition fo pitifully, that the Judge at their importunity granted him reprieve for the prefent, leaving him to fue out his pardon as fast as he could: and thus all Parties were content except the owner of the moneys, who went away with a Flea in his car: and our Adventurer fo plyed his business, wanting for neither money nor friends, that in fhort time he gained his pardon, and he was fet free: and I will add this further of our companion, that after this he turned honest man, for by virtue of the money he had gained in this robbery, and what was given him, he first set up an Alehouse, and soon after an Inn, and hath born all Offices in the Parish. And this story, faid I, Mistress Dorothy, fomwhat refembles yours, for your Thieves cheated the Country who paid the Knight what he had loft, and here on the contrary, the Country outwitted the Party rob'd, and faved their puries; and truly I have known feveral of these transactions, and fometimes the guilty escape, and the innocent are punished. And now, continued I, Mistress Dorothy: you fee I am acquainted with these kind of stories and as I have already related one of a Padder, which do fomwhat equal yours, I will now also tell you another of a Pick-pocket, which shall be much like yours of that nature, and thus it was.

A Crew of Blades of that Profession came to a Countrey-town on a market day, and finding there was little good to be done without some occasion to draw the People together more than ordinary, they therefore went to an Ale-house to consult on what was necessary to be done, and there after several debates held, it was concluded as follows, that whereas they had lately taken up a boy of about ten years of age, who was very desirous of learning their mystery, and whereas they had instructed him sufficiently in the theory thereof, that it was now time to put him in practice, and therefore the gravest man in the company was to walk out with him, shew him whathe was to do and help him if he stood in need thereof, and the rest of the society were to be at hand to do as occasion should offer; this being agreed upon, the old fellow took the Boy by the hand, and leads him through the Market, but there was no probabillity of a prize; and the Boy having promifed to do much, the old man fought out for some what that might be worthy his undertaking, and fo going out of the market they entred the Church-yard and there they faw an old woman with a great pouch of mony by herfide, kneeling by a Tomb-ftone and doing her devotions: Our old fellow feeing this, faid to the Boy, Sirrah, you fee that old woman with the Pouch; yes Sir, replyes the Boy, go thither faid he, and bring away her Purfe and money; the boy was not at all daunted at the boldness of the undertaking, but went up to the woman, and fo foon as he came near her, he likewise fell on his knees, and fell a mumbling as if he were also at his devotions: the old woman feeing him fo devout, permitted him to continue by her, but he putting down one of his hands by virtue of a Knife and Horn-thimble cut off her Purfe: The old man stood not far off and faw his carriage which was fo cunningly contriv'd that he could not forbear laughing at it, but bethinking him of a further Defign, he was refolved to discover the Boy, whereupon stopping some passengers that were going by, he faid to them, I pray friends behold yonder Boy how devout he is, do you not think he will be a good one in time that is fo religiously given already? yes furely, faid the people, Oh the cunning-ness of the young Rogue! faid the old fellow, and how much you are all mistaken !for I have stood and feen that young Rogue cut the old womans Purfe, and thereupon he went to his young practitioner in Roguery, and took him by the hand causing him to arise, and bringing him to the people, shewed them the Purse he had thus purchased; the old woman was not so intent at her devotions, but the casting her eyes aside likewise saw a Purse in the Boys hand, missing her own soon knew that to be it, wherefore she and all the people came nearer the Boy, who stood still as a stock and faid nothing to them, and all the people, not only they that went by, but also at their report most of the people in the market came thither to fee this young Rogue, admiring at the boldness of the fact, but they had been better to have staid away and minded their own Affairs; for our old Rogue feeing his opportunity, and that now there was a great many people together, he fell a diving into their pockets, and got good Pillage, and his Companions who were not far off at the noise came in to the sport, and all laid about them fo lustily that there were few who escaped without their pockets being pick'd, onely the old woman had her purfe again, but in exchange of that our old Rogue and his Companions had twenty others better fraught with moneys; in fine, they being weary with looking on the boy, & the Pick-pockets thinking they had done fufficiently for that time, the old fellow came to the boy, and told him that as he had first of all discovered him, so he should go along with him; the boy who had learned obedience to his Superiors, confented, and fo they march'd off, and went a little way out of the Town to an Ale-house, where they divided the plunder of the field, which amounted to above twenty pounds. And thus having told my Tale, I faid to Miftress Dorothy that I thought this was fomewhat like her difcourfe of the Pick-pockets. She told me fhe must needs confess it, and that both my Tales exceeded hers, and therefore the defired me to remitt her promife of proceeding any further in her discourse; for, said she, I shall be able to acquaint you with nothing but what you know already;

as for that, faid I, I must hear the conclusion of your story, but since you seem to prove of what I have told you, I shall proceed a little surther, and relate a Story to you somewhat like my first, and thus it was.

A High-way-man who had ufed the Trade for a long time, was at length catch'd, and the evidence was fo clear against him that he was likely to be cast, and then he was fure to go to pot, for he had been finged on the Fift already, and the Judge who was to try him was very fevere on that account; wherefore he was very melancholly, and much perplexed, and all the friends he had could not comfort him; however he was one day drinking with fome friends in the Jayl, and telling them the fadness of his condition, and feveral ways were propounded for his fafety; they told him that it would be best to compound the fact with the Profecutor; I have offered that, faid the Felon, and though I did not take above twenty pounds from the party, yet I have offered him fifty pound for composition if he will forbear profecution; but he will not hear of any thing but the Law, and will make no end but what that shall, and if it comes to that, then I am certain forrow will be my Sops: how, faid one that was prefent, will he not take fifty pounds for twenty? fure he wants no money, for if he knew the want of it fo much as I do, he would not make fo flight of fifty pounds; but I pray, continued he, what is the reason he is so outragious against you? what is the cause of his violent proceeding? Truly, reply'd the Thief, it was my mitfortune to be one of those two that met with him one night, and he having twenty pounds and a Watch about him we eas'd him of them, my Companion escaped, but I was seized the next night on suspition.

and having befides my share of the twenty pounds the watch about me which we had likewise taken from him, it was as he faid, a clear Testimony & evidence of the Fact, he earnestly enquired for the ring which my companion had for his share; & because I cannot help him to the ring he is thus obstinate, well then, I fee faid the other, you have confes'd the fact, & therefore there is no hope of faving you: truly replyed the Padder, I never yet confessed it to any one that I think will do me any prejudice, but much lefs to him; but in stead of confessing I have always stoutly denyed it, alleadging that I bought the Watch that Evening of one in whose company I was; nay then, replyed the other, your case is not so desperate as I thought it, and how fay you now, continued he, are you willing to be as good as your word, and give the fifty pounds you fpeak of to be discharged of this matter? yes with all my heart, said the Padder; well then said the other, if you will deposite the money into another mans hands that I may be fure of it when you are discharged I will undertake you shall be acquited; content, faid the other, but I pray acquaint me with the manner how you will manage this affair; our Undertaker replyed, that he had confidered of what was to be done, and was refolved to he might be fure of the money, to venture his own neck to fave the others, and that he would take upon him the fact, and thereby discharge him. The Padder was content to part with his money, but withalhedefired to have fome cleer demonstration how he intended to manage the business; to which our undertaker replyed, it must be your care not to be tryed till the last day of the assizes, and then still deny the fact very floutly, continuing your allegation that you did buy the Watch of a stranger, but one whom you knew if you again should fee him, and then I must borrow your Clothes, and the Perriwig you wore when you committed the Fact, and then I purpose at that time not to be far from you; and when I fee a convenient time I wil appear, & the manner shal be thus: I will attempt to pick a mans pocket, but I will do it fo unworkman like, that if he be not a very Dolt he shall discover me, I being discovered must prefently be brought before the Judge for the Fact, and when you fee me there you shall cry out as amazed and furprized, that I am the very man of whom you bought the Watch, and you shall then fee that although I deny it a little at first, yet I will at last confess my felf guilty, and so you shall be discharged: This, said our Undertaker is my propofition, and now if you can contrive it better, do, and I will follow your directions. The Padder and all his friends were hugely well fatisfied & pleafed with the Undertakers discourse, and could not find any fault in any particular, wherefore their Agreement was quickly perfected, and the fifty pounds were delivered into the cuftody of one whom they both knew and entrusted, to be kept by him until the Padder should be discharged. Several persons then prefent asked of the Undertaker how he intended to come off himfelf? as for that, replyed he, I have it in my head, and I will venture that, and keep it fafe enough too I hope: this business being thus agreed on they at present parted, and the Undertaker had the Clothes and Perriwig of the Padder delivered to him; and the Padder did put himfelf into a habit quite different from that; Thus Affairs stood when the Assizes began, which lasted two days, onely the first day was past, and our Padder had by his endeavours kept himself from being called; the second day was come and forenoon past, when in the after-noon this Cause was to be heard; the Judges fervant were fome of them gone out of the Town to make provision for their Master at another Town, whither he was that night to follow, fo that there was a necessity for his removal; & then about three of the clock this prisoner was brought to the bar, his Indictment was read, which was for robing the Countrey-man, of 20l. in money, and a filver watch, and a gold Ring, to this the prifoner pleaded not guilty and fo put himself upon his tryal, according to the ordinary form; then was the Countryman called, who did alledge that the prifoner at the Bar was the party, who with another his companion did rob him as aforefaid; the prifoner denyed the fact, and defired the Judge to ask his accuser what habit he was then in, to this the Countrey-man replyed, that indeed his habit and hair were then different from what he now had, but that was an easie thing to alter, but he was sure he was the man, for he had his very watch in his pocket, to this the prisoner replyed as formerly, that he bought it of a perfon who indeed was habited as the Country-man had described. He was come to this part of his tryal when a noise was heard in the Court of crying out a pick-pocket, a pick-pocket, and foon after our undertaker was haled into Court; the Judge feeing him, faid, Sirrah, how durft you be fo bold? I shall talk with you by and by, set him by at prefent; the prifoner at the Bar feeing it was now a fit time, cryed out, O my Lord! I pray let him flay here now, for indeed my Lord that is the very person of whom I bought the watch, and whose just fate hath brought him hither at this time, that my innocency may be cleared, therefore I befeech you my Lord, let him be examined, and I question not but you will foon find my innocency. The Judge hearing the exclamations of the prisoner, and fuppoling there might be fomewhat in the case, and withal being defirous to execute justice caused the Undertaker to be brought to the bar, and then he thus began: now, you who are the prisoner at the bar, and upon your tryal, what do you fay to, or charge this man with; my Lord replyed the padder, I fay and alledge that this Person who now stands here by me, is the very person of whom I bought the watch, and I gave him fifty shillings for it, let him deny it if he can, and my Lord I further fay, that I suppose he is the person who committed the robbery, for he is habited just as this Country-man described one of them to be: what say you to this: faid my Lord to the Country-man, truly my Lord, faid he, I am fomewhat at a stand, for indeed one of those who robb'd me was habited as this fellow is, pointing to the undertaker, but I finding my Watch in the custody of this other did verily believe and was very confident that it was he that robb'd me, but I must leave all to your Lord-ship and the Jury: Now, you Sir, faid my Lord to the undertaker, what fay you for your felf? did you fell a Watch to this man here? my Lord, replyed he, I have never a Watch, no, I know that now, faid my Lord, but did you not fell a Watch to this man? my Lord faid the undertaker, I am an honest man, that's a fign of your honesty, when you pick a pocket in my presence, my Lord it is a mistake, replyed the Fellow; I believe, faid my Lord, we shall not be mistaken in you by and by, having thus said the Watch it felf was produc'd, and fhew'd to the undertaker; and he was asked if he knew it, yes, my Lord, faid he, I had fuch a watch as this; and where had you it? I know not faid the undertaker: at this the Padder cryed out, O my Lord, he hath faid enough to discharge me and accuse himself, for he ownes he had the Watch, and I am fure I bought it of him, therefore good my Lord do me Justice? acquit me, and punish him; all in due time said my Lord, we must not condemn him before he be lawfully indicted, but I think he hath confess'd enough against himself, and therefore he shall be committed, and since I cannot flay now any longer he shall be indicted the next Affizes, till then he must lye by it and have time to repent: but I pray my Lord, faid the Padder, let me be discharged; I cannot discharge you reply'd my Lord, now you are upon your tryal, except the Jury find you not guilty: I put my felf upon them, faid the Padder, whereupon the Jury only asking the Undertaker fome questions which he doubtfully answered, the Jury gave their Verdict, Not guilty, and thus was the Padder discharged, but however he was bound to come in evidence the next Affizes against the undertaker, and fo was the Country-man, but he had been better to have taken fifty pounds than thus to have troubled himself about the Ring, for in the end he loft all, and no hanging was in the case; for when the next Affizes came, and our Undertaker was indicted, the Tale was now of another Hogg, he denyed all knowledge of the Watch, and as he had owned any thing before, he now again denyed it, bringing witneffes to prove where he was at that hour, and all the time of the robbery, and faying, he told them it was a mistake the last time, that he was then only surprized; and indeed he spake so well, and to the purpose, that he was acquitted of the robbery, and only whipt a little for picking the pocket, and fo he march'd off with fifty pounds; and the Padder who did not appear at the Affizes as witness against him, let the recognizance go against him, leaving the law to find him where they could catch him.

CHAP. XVIII.

Mistress Maxy relates a notable story of a Countrey-Gentleman's cheating a Gold smith; another much more remarkable, of a Gentlemans Boy by assistance of his Master, who put a notable trick on a Gold-smith: afterwards going for France, is notoriously robb'd by way of retaliation, the manner how, with with his accompanying a seeming Gallant to a Feast who steads a piece of Plate.

Aving now finished my discourse, I defired Mi-ftress Dorothy to proceed in hers, and put an end to her Adventures, to which fhe replyed, that fince I was fo well acquainted with thefe passages, and could recount things fo various and wittily-pleafant, which far exceeded any thing the could fay, the defired to be excused from any further recital; I told her I must needs however, hear what she could further fay, for all fhe had hitherto faid was various from what I had related to her; and Mistress Mary likewise joyned with me in this request, telling her that she must needs proceed in her Narrative, for the longed to hear what was the end of the Hoft, and Hoftess, and how she left them and came to London, and what elfe had hapned to her till the first of their Acquaintance. Truly replyed Miftrefs Dorothy, I shall give you satisfaction to all these particulars; but methinks you were but fhort in your Narrative and might have enlarg'd; and fince you did as I believe, omit many passages of your Life that were confiderable, I pray let us hear fome of them from you. I must consess, said Mistress Mary, that in the recital I made you of my actions, I only recounted to you those things which did pertain to my own story, as thinking it impertinent to relate any others; but if I had thought it pleasant, I could likewise have told you of some such Robberies and Cheates, as some of my acquaintance were engag'd in. It is not too late to do it now, said I to her; and seeing Mistress Dorothy is not yet pleased to continue her story, I pray you therefore to let us know some of your experience in this nature. I shall not deny your request, replyed Mistress Mary, and therefore after some little pause to recollect her self-of what she had to fay; she thus began.

I must confess that I had several of my Customers whileft I liv'd publickly at London, who although they come to me full, return'd empty, and then neceffity put them upon unlawful courses, and when they could not live of themselves, then they liv'd by fhirking upon others; this was their first step, and when this would not do, and they began to be angry and discontented that they could not wear money in their pockets, they then fell to gameing, and all the Cheats of that Mystery were put in practice; when that course left them, the next was to pick pockets, fleal Cloaks, and a hundred fuch kinde of thirking tricks, till from one degree to another they came to the high pad, and from thence to the Goal, and fo to the Gibbet; many I fay, of my acquaintance did run through all these Courses, and beginning, as they fay, with a pin, proceeded to a point, and fo to a biggar thing, till the rope held them; but I alwayes made it my bufiness to leave them off when they began these Courses. Among others that came to me, I had a Country Gentleman who defigning to deal honeftly with a fhop-keeper, had occasion to out-wit him, who intended to cheat the Country-man. The Countrey Gentleman when he came to me had his Pockets well lined with Half-Crown Pieces, but he loving his pleafure I made him pay for it fo confiderably, that his Pocket was well near emptied: he had twenty Pieces of Gold and feveral Rings, part of which I defign'd to be Mistress of, but he was to wife and wary to part from any fuch precious Commodities: but an urgent occasion happening, and mony being wanting, he was refolved to fell a Diamond Ring that he had, which was worth fifty pounds, wherefore he keeping a Servant took him along, and to Lombard-street they went, when he came there, pitch'd upon a Goldfmiths Shop where he intended to fell it; he therefore drew off his Ring, and ask'd the Goldsmith what it was worth? The Goldsmith looking on him, and then on the Ring, did hope to make this Ring his own for a fmall matter; and feeing our Countreyman in a plain Countrey Habit, did believe that he had little skill in Diamonds, and that this came accidentally to his possession, and that he might purchase it very easily, wherefore he being doubtful what to answer as to Price, told the Countrey-man that the worth of it was uncertain, for he could not directly tell whether it was right, or counterfeit; As for that, faid the Countrey-man, I believe it is right, and dare warrant it, and indeed I intend to fell it, and therefore would know what you will give me for it: Truly, replyed the Goldsmith, I believe it may be worth ten pounds; Yes, and more money, faid the Countrey-man; Not much more, faid the Goldsmith, for look you here, faid he, here is a Ring which I will warrant is much better than yours, and I will also warrant it to be a right good diamond, and I will fell it you for twenty pounds:

This the Goldsmith said, supposing that the Countrey-man who came to fell, had no skill, inclination, nor money to buy; but the Countrey-man believing that the Goldsmith onely faid thus, thinking to draw him on to part from his own Ring the more eafily. and by that means cheat him, refolv'd if he could, to be too wife for the Goldsmith; wherefore taking both the Rings into his hands as to compare them together, he thus faid: I am fure mine is a right Diamond: and fo is mine, reply'd the Goldsmith: and faid the Countrey-man, shall I have it for twenty pounds? Yes, reply'd the Goldsmith; but faid he, I suppose you come to fell, and not to buy; and fince you shall see I will be a good Customer, I will give you fifteen pounds for yours. Nay reply'd the Countrey-man, fince I have had my choice to by or fell, I will never refuse a good Penny-worth, as I think this is, therefore Mafter Goldsmith, I will keep my own and give you money for yours: Where is it? faid the Goldfinith hastily, and endeavouring then to feize on his Ring; Hold a blow there, faid the Countrey-man, here's your money, but the Ring I will keep. The Goldfmith feeing himfelf caught, fluftered and flounced like a mad man, and the Countrey-man pulling out a little Purfe, told down twenty Pieces of Gold, & faid, Here Shop-keeper, here's your money; but I hope you will allow me eighteen pence a piece in exchange for my Gold. Tell not me of exchange, but give me my Ring, faid the Goldsmith: It is mine, faid the Countrey-man, for I have bought it and paid for it, and have witness of my Bargain. All this would not ferve the Goldsmith's turn, but he curs'd & fwore that the Countrey-man came to cheat him. & his ring he would have; & at the noise several people came about his Shop, but he was fo perplexed that he could not tell his Tale, and the Countrey-Gentleman could; at length a Constable came, and although the Goldsmith knew not to what purpose, yet before a Justice he would go: the Countrey-man was content, and therefore together they went; when they came there, the Goldsmith who was the plaintiff, began his Tale, and faid, that the Countrey-man had taken a Diamond Ringfrom him worth one hundred pounds; and would give him but twenty pounds for it. have a care what you fay, reply'd the Country-man; for if you charge me with taking a ring from you, I suppose that is stealing; and if you say fo, I shall vex you farther than I have done, and then he told the Justice the whole story as I have related, which was then a very plain case, & for proof of the matter, the Countrey-Gentleman's man was witness. The Goldsmith hearing this, alleadged, that he believed the Countrey Gentleman and his man were both Impostors and Cheats: to this the Countrey-man reply'd as before, that he were beft have a care he did not make his case worse, and bring an old house on his head by flandering of him, for it was well known that he was a Gentle-man of three hundred pounds per Annum, and liv'd at a place he nam'd but twenty miles from London; and that he being defirous to fell a ring, came to his shop to that purpose, but he would have cheated him; but it prov'd he only made a rod for his own breech, and what he intended to him, was fallen upon himself: thus did the Country Gentleman make good his discourse, and the Justice seeing there was no injustice done, difmiff'd them; but order'd that his Neighbour the Goldsmith should have the twenty pieces of Gold for twenty pounds, though they were worth more in exchange; and this was all the fatisfaction he had.

The Country Gentleman went prefently to a Citizen, an acquaintance of his, to whom he deliver'd the ring he had fo purchafed, defiring him to fell it for him which he did; for being known to be a Citizen, the Goldfmith that bought it offered him at the first word Ninety five pounds for it, and in the end gave him forty shillings more, with which money he'returned to the Countrey-man, and he giving him the forty shillings for his pains, returned with the rest to me, relating all the matter as it had passed. I was as much pleas'd as he, because I question'd not but I should partake with him, and so I did; for he gave me ten pound to buy me a Gown; and thus was our Goldsmith well enough ferv'd. And it was not long after, before another Goldsmith had a confiderable loss, and thus it was.

Amongft the other Customers that came to me, there was a Gentleman, a Blade of fortune, who although hewas of a good Family, yet being a younger Brother, had but little besides his wits to live upon; but as he was a Gentleman, so kept himself in a Garb according to his Quality, and had a foot boy in a Livery to attend him: this boy was a notable young Rogue, and had affisted his Master in many an exploit, and was privy to most of his secrets: this young man (continued Mistress Mary) coming to visit me, and we falling into discourses of wit, I related to him the adventure of the Countrey-Gentleman with the Goldsmith; he was much pleased with the relation, and told me the Goldsmith was well enough served, and that above all trades, he had a greater picque or anger against them than any; for (faid he) it grieves me to the heart to walk through Cheapside or Lombard-street, with little or no moneyes in my pocket, and see so fo great a quantity of Jacobus'es and other Gold, either lying in their Glass-cases, or telling on the Compters, and methinks when I fee it my fingers itch to be handling of fome of them; but I believe if a Gentleman should starve they would not part from any without very good Security; but (faid he) I have now thought upon a way how to get fome of them without much hazard; and I being defirous to know, he told me thus: my boy and I will walk along; and Sirrah, faid he to the boy, when I make a fmall ftop, do you go into the Goldsmiths Shop where you shall see them telling of money; and laying your hand upon a heap, catch up a handful, but fo foon as you have taken it up, let it fall down again and leave it where you had it, and come after me and leave the rest to my management; the boy promis'd to do as he was directed; but, said I, what advantage can you make by your boys handling of money and leaving it behind him? as for that, faid he, I question not before I have done I shall make a good business of it, and thereupon he left me, and went immediatly to put this his project in execution; he returned that evening and told me all was well yet, and it would be better in time: I defired to know his meaning, whereupon he told me, that according to his appointment the boy went into the Goldsmiths shop, took up a handful of money, laid it all down again and ran away to him, that he was no fooner come to him, but the Goldsmiths Servants were at his heels, that he looking about and feeing them, ask'd what the matter was? they reply'd, his boy had stollen some money: he answer'd he knew it was falfe, they faid it was true; and he fhould go back with them to their Mafter: the boy was content, and fo was the Master, when coming to the Shop, the Goldsmith himself said that that Boy, if he were his, had robb'd him. The Boy and his Mafter both denyed it, and they fell to hot words, fo that the Goldsmith call'd me (said the Gentleman) Shirking Fellow, and that he would have me fent to Newgate for robbing him: for if the boy did it, it was by my appointment: I (faid the Gentleman) told him that he did abuse me, and that in conclufion must, and should pay for it: but first I defired to know with what Sum they charged the boy; they faid they knew not, but that he had taken money from a heap which they were telling of, which heap was a hundred pounds; hearing them fay thus, I told them I would ftay the telling of it, and then they might judge who had the abuse: they were content with it, and accordingly went to telling: half an hour had difpatched that matter, and then they found that they had all their money right to a farthing. The Goldsmith seeing this, asked my pardon for the affront: for, faid he, it is a mistake: I answer'd, that he must pay for his prating, and that I was a Person of that quality that would not put up the affront, and that he must hear further from me; he feeing me fo hot, was as chollerick as I, and fo we parted, and thus far (faid he) I have proceeded. But all this while (faid I) I do not fee where is your gain: that is to come, faid he, and fo it was, and did come in, and that confiderably too; for the next day he caused the Goldsmith to be arrefled in an action of Defamation, and the Sergeant who arrefted him being well fee'd by the Gentleman, told the Goldsmith that he were best to compound the matter, for the Gentleman was a Perfon of Quality, and would not put it up, but make him pay foundly for it, if he proceeded any further. The Goldfmith being defirous of quiet harkned to his counsel, and agreed to give 10% but that would not be taken; but twenty pounds was given to the Gentleman, and fo the business was made up for the present. Our Gentleman who had some of the Goldfmiths money, was refolv'd to have more, or venture hard for it; wherefore having again given inftructions to his Boy what do, he made feveral Iourneys to the Goldsmiths, walking by his door to watch an opportunity, at length he found one; for he feeing the Servants telling of a confiderable quantity of Gold; he gave the fign to his Boy, who prefently went in and clapping his hand on the heap, took up and brought away a full handful, and coming to his Mafter gave it him; neither did the Boy make fuch hafte out of the Shop, but that he could hear a stranger who was in the Shop receiving money, fay to the Apprentice, why do you not ftop the Boy? no, faid the Apprentice, I do not mean it, I know him well enough, my Mafter paid Sauce lately for stopping him; and so they continued telling their money, which I am fure did not fall out fo right as formerly; for that evening the Mafter and Boy both came to my lodging, and not only told me how they had fped, but I faw the effects of their enterprize; for this young rogue had brought off with him between forty and fifty brave yellow pieces; we all three rejoyced at our good fortune, for I was concerned, having five pieces of it given to me, I then told the Gentleman that he had run a very great hazard, and that I did not think he had practis'd thefe tricks; no truly, replyed he, this is the first I ever did in England, but I have been abroad in France and other Countreys, where I was acquainted with rare ingenious fellows at these tricks, and they had notable inventions to get moneys; and fome-times I would put in as a Party with them, and from them it was that I learned this confidence: I then defired him to relate to me fome of his practifes in those Countreys, he foon granted my request, and began as followeth.

I had not been long in Paris but I had fome tricks put upon me; the first was this, I endeavoured to appear brave, made a rich Sute and Cloak, and with this ftrutted about the streets to shew my felf, hoping and expecting that fome French Madam or other would fall in love with me, but instead of that, some of these Gentlemen Divers fell in love with my Cloak, and were refolved to have it, wherefore they watched me one evening and as it growing late I was going home to my Quarters passing through a blind Lane where was nothing but back doors of Gentlemens stables; three fellows feized on me, one dives into my pockets, whence he fish'd out all the little money I had about me, which amounted to above thirty shillings English, another draws his knife and cuts the Neck-button of my Cloak, and the third takes off my hat; I had not loft all my spirits, so that I told them they did very uncivily by me to take away my hat, and leave me to walk without one; they begun to fwear at me and forc'd me to entreat for my hat, and withal confidering that the lofs of my Cloak would fpoil my Suit, I told them that I hoped as they were Gentlemen, fo they would hear reason, and offered if they would put any price upon the Cloak I would redeem it; they thinking money would do them more good than the Cloak, told me that if I would give them five pounds, I should have it: the Cloak stood me in ten pounds, and therefore I was refolved to give them five pounds. therefore I defired them to name the place and time when I should meet them with the money; they answered me the next evening about that time, and in a place there adjoyning in the street; but they told me that if I thought by that appointment to bring any with me to catch them, that then they would mifchief me; I promis'd them that I would not, and fo we departed, but withal they were fo civil as to give me my Hat along with me; I went home to my Lodging, and though I was vexed at my misfortune, yet I was forced to reft with patience till the next evening when putting the promis'd money in my pocket, went at the time to the place appointed; I had not staid there long but I heard the noise of a Coach, and on a fudden two men came out at the boot, and feifing on me muffled me in one of their Cloaks and put me into the Coach; this done, the Coach-man did drive on apace, and I was in but bad taking to think what a cafe I was in, and did verily believe that those fellows who had the last night taken my money and Cloak from me, had now a Defign upon my life, and therefore were come themselves, or had sent some of their Companions, to rob and kill me, I had not continued long in these thoughts but the coach stopt, and I was taken out of it, and being carried into a Court-yard, was unmuffled, and led into a great Hall, where I was met by those three who had the night before Dif-cloak'd me; they told me I was wel-come, and that what had been done to me that evening was only to prevent their being out-witted and difcovered by me, and withal, as I was a stranger, to treat and entertain me amongst them; I hearing that it was no worse Pluck'd up my Spirits and anfwer'd them, that I was refolv'd to be in every thing as good as my word, and therefore came alone to the place appointed, and had brought my money with me; they then led me through the Hall into an adjoyning Wardrobe which was full of Cloaks, Gowns, Hatts, Swords, and all fuch kind of Habili-ments, and among the rest I saw my Cloak, wherefore I told out the money and took my Cloak, put it on, and went into the Hall amongst them, there I was welcomed by feveral of the Gang and they had women amongst them, who all looked on me with a cheerful countenance, & treated me very civily. This they all defired of me that if I intended their friendship and my own safety, I must not take any notice of them before any company, or if I met them abroad; I promis'd to perform this Injunction, and fo we went to supper, after that to dancing, and spent three or four hours in very pleasant manner, and then several of them departing I thought it was time for me to do fo too, but I believed it would be convenient to ask leave before I went; wherefore I told those whom I best knew, that I was amind if they pleas'd, to go home; they told me that I might do fo, but it must be in the same manner as I came; I confented to it, and two of them going into the Coach with me, hid my face for a fhort space, and then let me see; but I quickly perceived that I had gone through feveral By-lanes and paffages, and at length came to the place where I had been taken up, and there they fet me down, and the Coachman whirling about left me in a moment; I therefore went the ready way home to my Lodging, where I went to bed and confulted with my felf about this Adventure, not having known or heard of the like; but it was not many days before I was engaged in another which was as strange as the former. Although I was in a strange Countrey, yet I had some acquaintance whom I vifited fometimes; One day being folitary a walking, I met with one of these of my acquaintance, he faluted me very courteoufly, and told me he supposed I was minded to break off the friendfhip we had lately contracted because I had been so great a stranger at his house: I replyed, that I intended fuddenly to give him a visit; I pray then, Sir, faid he, let it be to morrow, the fooner the better, for I have a great defire to converse with you; and Sir, faid he, if you have any friend bring him with you, and for your fake he shall be as welcome as your felf; I replyed, it was very likely that I should wait upon him, and thus we parted: I remember fince that about the time I met this friend. I was overtaken by a gentile fellow, who had followed me like my fhaddow, and during the time of this converse he waited as I did, and now I being parted from my friend, and having walked a little faster than before, I had dropt my Gentleman who fauntred behind. The next day about the time that mortals whet their Knives on Thresholds, and Shooefoles, I prepared to go to dinner to my friends, and again by the way I was accosted by this gentile fellow, who had the day before followed me, and now he did so again; and when I came to my friends house and entred, there he did so too, and with as much confidence as if he had been of great acquaintance with the Inviter; he fate down among other Guefts that were there, Dinner was foon after brought in, and there being feveral Guests much victuals, and much variety was ferved at the Table, my strange Gentleman did eat as heartily and talk as boldly as any there, and I thought him to be one of the Inviters acquaintance, and he supposed he was my friend which I had brought with me; but he proved to be very no good friend to the man of the house, for waiting his opportunity he went to the Cupboards head which flood in a convenient place, and clapping a piece of plate worth ten pounds under his Cloak, he walked off incognito. I foon after miffed him, and my friend miffed my friend as he told me, but it was not much longer e're the Plate was miffing, and although private fearch was made, yet it was not found, and our friend being gone, the Inviter missing none of the Guests but him, asked me for him, but when I told him he was no friend nor acquaintance of mine, he foon knew which way his Plate went. Thus (faid he) he thinking him to be my friend, and I thinking him to be his, this fellow had the conveniency of doing this injury; but, continued he, I foon understood that it was a usual matter to play such pranks and that more considerable, and that withal a very bold confidence, unufual with other Nations, and upon fecond thoughts I remember I had feen this fellow among those who had my Cloak, but it was too late now to remember it, and it had been unsafe then to have taken any notice of him, remembring the Charge had been given me.

CHAP. XIX.

Two notorious Rogues robb'd a Church by the help of two Fryers habits they had murther'd; afterwards they robb'd a Merchant of Silks, Plate, &c. By a notable firatagem they laid for the purpose in an Inn next adjacent, they ransack'd a Linnen-drapers Shop in the night by conveying a boy into it being enclos'd within a supposed Bayl of Goods, who proved the Key to let them in to perfect their design; by counterfeiting a Gentlemans key, they stole from him six hundred Crowns, and murdering him slead his sace that he might not be known, but were notwithstanding by a miraculous providence discovered and executed, who being penitent at their death, confest many notorious villanies. A notable trick a Gentleman puts upon a Pick pocket.

Thus (continued Mistress Mary) did this Gentleman finish his two stories of the Cloak, and the piece of Plate I told him I wondered at the boldness of those French men, and that they exceeded our Countrey men in considence; yes, (said he) if you knew so much as I, you would have reason to say so, for it is a usual thing for them to seize Gentlemen if they can light upon them in any convenient place: and carry them some miles out of the Town, and make them pay money for a ransom, neither dare they contradict it lest worse befal them, and they are bloodily minded, for if they cannot get money, they will do any murder. Not far from Paris, continued he, two of these Rogues had been hunting for Prey, and because they could not meet with any purchase, they were refolved rather than fail to commit fome murder; the next that met them were two Fryers, these having no money to redeem their lives they dispatched into the other world, and having fo done, they ftript them; and put on their Fryers weeds; being thus habited they march'd further into the Country, and coming late to a Countrey-town, went to the Parfons house, who entertained them; as they came in late, fo they went out early, pretending necessary occasions, and the Parson not being up nor willing to rife fo foon, they defired the Key of the Church (which was adjoyning to the house) that they might go it to do their devotions before they went? the Key was accordingly delivered, and they went in, but inflead of faying their prayers, they made a prey of what they met with, the filver Chalices, and all the Ornaments of the Church they took with them, and fo went on their wayes to do more mischief, but not having the conveniency to execute their defigns in the habit they were in, they therefore went to the place where they had hid their own, and there putting them on, they march'd to Paris, where they walked about the City to efpy what mischief might be done; being now both weary, hungry, and thirsty, they went into a drinking house, which being full of Guests below, they were conducted up one pair of ftairs, and there they had both victuals and drink fuch as they defired, when their bellies were full, their eyes did wander about the Room, to fee if they might efpy any thing to make a purchase of; but although they could fee nothing in that room, yet they could difcern that in the house opposite to them, there was much rich Goods, fine Silks, and Sattins; their fingers itch'd to be handling of them, but at prefent they knew not how, however refolving that they would attempt it, but not finding any means how at prefent to do it, they therefore were refolved to try if they could take up their Ouarters at the house they were drinking in, and then they did not question but they should in short time find out some means to execute their Design, having taken this refolution, they therefore call'd for more drink, and their Landlords company, and being frolick, and expensive, that they might be accounted good Guests, they asked of the Landlord whether they might not have a Lodging there? he believing it would be to his profit, told them they might, but they must lodge one pair of Stairs higher; they were well enough content with that, and therefore drank on till it was night, and then to bed they went; and laid their plot how to rob this Merchants house, which they did in few days after: In order to which Defign of theirs, they went out and purchased Ropes, and a Pully, and feeing a large Cheft to be fold at the fecond hand. they likewife bought that, and putting in their Ropes and Pully, and a great quantity of Raggs and stones, and fuch like Trash, that it might feem heavy, they caused it to be carried to their Lodging: Their Host feeing fo large a Cheft, and fo heavy, did believe that his Guefts were rich, and that a confiderable quantity of Treasure was therein enclosed, and therefore gave them a greater respect than formerly. every day when they went out, carried out part of the Rubbish which they had bestowed in the Chest, fo that in short time it was empty, or at least, nothing but the Ropes and Pully was in it: They only now waited for a convenient opportunity to execute their defign, which they confidered must be done when both the houses, as well that where they lodged, as the Merchants house they intended to rob, were empty; and no day was fo likely to leave them fo, as a Sunday; wherefore that they might have the better pretence for flaying at home, they both pretended fome indisposition in their bodyes, for which they faid they thought it convenient to take Physick, they had been fo good Guefts to the house, that the Hoft was willing to accommodate them in anything; however, when he and his Family went to Church, they lock'd the Street-door: No fooner was that house clear, but they were resolved to attempt the other, and knowing that the Master and Mistress. and most, if not all the Family, was likewise gone out. they were refolved to kill the rest, if they found any fingle perfon that fhould oppose them: They intended to make their way into the house by going down the chimny, and therefore they had provided Ropes and a Pully, and there was no great difficulty to get to the house top, for they ascended to the Garret of their Landlords house, got out of the window to the top of that, and the other house joyning to that, to the street side, they soon got to the Chimny they intended to descend. The house where they lodged, and this Merchants house were joyned together in the Front, but backwards there was an Ally of about fix foot wide that feperated them, and a crofs this Ally it was that they first saw the Room wherein the Silks were placed; they being gotten to the Chimny's top, laid a piece of Timber acrofs, and fastening their Pully to that, and putting their Rope in the Pully, the one who was to defcend the Chinny, took hold of one end of the Rope; and his companion holling another part of the Rope, by degrees he was let down into the Room he defired: It was two pair of flairs below the Garret, and in regard the Silk might be foild and fpoil'd if they were drawn up the chimny, they did not take that course but a more easie one, for he that was on the house top, went into their lodging the same way he came up, and going down into the Chamber that was even with, and opposite to that where his Companion was, he opened a Casement, and his Companion doing the like, they could without much difficulty reach to one another, and so in short time the richest, and best of the Merchants Silk was conveyed into their Quarters. Our Thieves feeing they had gained this prize with fo little danger and difficulty, were refolved to get more if they could; and therefore he that was in the house ranfack'd it all over, and finding a confiderable quantity of Plate and money, he likewise conveyed it to his Companion; and now having done all this, he went into the Shop, intending to leave the ftreet door open, that the Merchant when he came home might suppose that the thieves who had robb'd him did come in that ways, but the street door was double lock'd, and therefore it could not be opened, wherefore he undid the bolts of one of the Shop windows, and leaving it loofely open, he went up agen, and telling his Companion what he had done, and that there was no more to be done, he ordered him to go to the house top, and as he had affifted in letting him down the Chimny, fo to help to draw him up, which the other did accordingly. There was one scruple came into their minds, that although the Shop-window was opened, and the Merchant might reasonably enough imagine that the Thieves who had robb'd him, had come in that way, yet they were very fenfible, that with defcending and afcending the Chimny they had thrown down much foot, which might caufe a jealoufie, that they who robb'd the house might come in that way, and so they might be discover'd; wherefore to prevent all such fuspition as much as they could, they tumbled down two or three Brick-batts that lay on the top of the Chimny, which might be supposed to be blown down by the wind; and having thus done they retired to their Ouarters, disposing all their Silks, Money, and Plateunto their Cheft, and that there might be the less fuspition of them, the Landlord foon returning, one of them pretending to be very ill, and the other very dilligent in attending his Companion; their Landlord furnished them with strong waters, and such other cordials as were at hand; and the Merchant coming home found his Shop-window open, and his house robb'd, it being fo apparent as he thought that the Robbers came in, or went out at the Shop-windows; he had no suspition of any other contrivance, all that he could do was to have all fuspitious places fearch'd, his neighbours house escaped, being too near home to be suspected: the host only thinking he had efcap'd a danger being fo near, and telling them that it was not good to leave a house empty, and although all his folks went with him to Church, yet he had left two honest Guests in his house, and besides they were locked in fast enough. Thus, continued the Gentleman, was this Robbery committed, and they who were guilty went away unfufpected. The next day they conveyed part of their purchase away to a place where they hid all their prizes, and by degrees getting the most part away, they continued not long in those Quarters, but made another Remove. These fellows were notable cunning Rafcals, and had fo many ways to bring in Purchases, that they gathered much goods together, but covetous of more still attempted further Projects, till in the end they were caught and defervedly punished.

The next Project they had (faid the Gentleman) was this, they had a boy who oftentimes ferved and affifted them in their undertaking, and he was now very useful; for one day intending to steal, they pretended to buy some Linnen cloath; and a conceit coming into their heads, they did buy fome confiderable quantity; they left it at the Drapers where they bought it, paying a fmall matter of money in part at prefent, promifing to come the next day and fetch it away, and pay the rest of the money: the next day they came and brought a Porter with them loaden with a Bayl made up, as they faid, of Woollen-cloath which they faid they had bought, and intending to fend that, and what they had bought of him into the Countrey, the Carrier was gone before they came, and therefore they could not fend away either till the next day; when, they faid, another Carrier was to go to the place they intended to fend to; and therefore they defired the Shop-keeper to let them leave that Bayl of Cloth in his Shop till the next day, when they intended to fetch them both. They having been Cuftomers to the Shop, he did not refuse them so small a courtefie, but permitted them to fet it in a convenient place in the Shop; but his entertaining of that Bayl of Cloth, was almost as fatal to him as the Trojans entertainment of the wooden-horse; for at midnight when the Draper was afleep, these Rogues were wakeful, and having conveyed this Roguish Boy I told you of, into this Bayl, which they pretended was Cloth, he taking out his Knife cut his way through, fo that he came out the Bayl, and not finding the Key of the Shop-door, he opened the Shop-windows and did let in his two Mafters, who waited there for that purpofe; they being within the Shop were not idle, but having feen by day-light where the finest Cloth was plac'd they now removed it, and breaking open a Desk wherein they had observed the Draper did put his money, there they found four hundred French Crowns. fo taking that money, and as much of the finest Cloth as they could carry, they march'd off; neither did the boy ftay behinde, but leaving an empty Bavl covered with Canvas, and stuff'd round about with Cotton, he also loading himself, went with his masters, the fame way he had let them in, and fo they carried this purchase to the rest. The next morning the Draper, and his Servants were foon fensible of the Robbery, and feeing the hole cut in the Bayl, they quickly discovered the manner how, but it was fuch a Novelty as had not been heard of; and he was forced to rest himself contented with his loss, for notwithstanding all his endeavours, he could not for the prefent hear of his Customers, who indeed were fafe enough in their Quarters. These Rogues who now had money enough put themselves in a gentle habit, and kept company with the best, but still they waited to do all the mischief they could, and to that end they ingratiated themselves into the company of Countrey Gentlemen, fuch as were best acquainted with the Customs and Humors of the Town; many they met with, and few escaped them, but that they either got them into play, cheated them, or pick'd their pockets or made fome other prize of them: Among others they met with a young Country-Gentleman, who had been unfortunate enough already, for he having had a quarrel about a mistress, and fighting with his Rival, had the Fortune, or Misfortune rather, to kill him; Divine vengeance feldom miffes to purfue, and overtake those who are guilty of murther; & although these kind of murthers, which are the most excusable, being as they term them, fairly done, pass rather for pieces of gallantry than otherwife; yet fome great misfortune always attends them, as I have observ'd by feveral Precedents. but more especially by this Gentlemans misfortunes; for no fooner had he made his Enemy to fall in the place where they had fought, but he was forc'd to fly away for his own fafety, doubting elfe he might fall in to the hands of Justice; he therefore with all fpeed retired to a place, fix miles from thence, where he had fought, to a friends house, and not thinking himself safe, being there provided with money enough for a long journey, he travelled on towards Paris, being a place whose large Circuit, and number of inhabitants might hide him from all pursuers; in his way thither he was met by Thieves, who attempted to rob him, but they being but two and he valliant enough, as he thought to oppose them, drew and defended himfelf, he here likewise had the fortune to cause one of them to drop down by him, which the other feeing, fled, but not fo far but that he foon returned with three more in his company; The Gentleman feeing this, and doubting that now he should not onely be robb'd of what he had, but also believing that they would kill him to revenge their fellow; he therefore takes one Purfe of money and threw it into a Hedge near him, hopeing that if he did escape, he might have that for a referve. By this time the thieves were come up to him, and all drew upon him, he (knowing that odds did overcome Hercules and might do him) therefore told them, that if it were his mony they wanted, he would deliver it to them; although they were very angry for the lofs of their Companion, yet it being money that they came for, they accepted of that; he giving them another Purfe of money which he had about him; but in regard they had fuffered fo great a lofs as the death of one of their Companions, they stripp'd, and ty'd our young Gentleman, and taking awaytheir Companion with them, they departed. He lay not long there but was unty'd, and reliev'd by some Passengers, who furnished him with an old Coat, and he taking up his Purfe of money, where he had laid it, went along with them to the next Town; there he furnished himself with Cloaths, and fo travelled on towards Paris: but before he came thither, he was again met with by Thieves, who then robb'd him of all his money; fo that when he came into the City he was in a fad condition, being a Stranger, moneyless, and friendless: however thefe last Thieves being so civil as to leave him his Cloaths, he took a lodging in a convenient place of the Town, and prefently fent away to his friends, acquainting them with his misfortunes, and defiring them to fend him more money: Although it was a great way he had to fend, yet in a little time he received an answer according to his expectations, and although till then he was forc'd to run on the Score, and keep house, yet now he honestly paid his Hoft, and putting himself in a very good Garb, he now went abroad, & light into the company of our two thievifh Rogues who dealt Roguithly with him; for perceiving him to be a stranger, they took him up, and became his companions; and that they might be able to do him the more mifchief, they fo far ingratiated themselves into his company, as to take a lodging where he lay, and then finding that he was pretty well furnished with moneys, they tryed several ways to get it from him, they tempted him to gameing, but he was not guilty of that hazardous vanity, and would not play; he carried but little money in his pocket, but he left the reft in his Trunk which was also lock'd up in his Chamber; and the Landlord of the house being an honest man, was very careful of it; however they were refolved to be Mafters of it by one means or other: but they delayed it a while longer by an occasion that fell out; he had written for more moneys, intending to pass from France into the Low-countreys; and thereupon a Letter came one day to his hands, which acquainted him, that within fourteen days he might receive fix hundred Crowns of a Merchant in Paris, to whom a Bill of Exchange was directed; this Letter he dropt by accident, and one of these Rogues met with and read it, but knowing that it would advantage him nothing to keep it, he foon gave it to the owner. He acquainted his Companion with the News, and how he did believe that the Gentleman would, when he received that money, bring it home to his Lodging, wherefore they would ftay until that time & then they would rob him of it all; this resolution they both continued in, and that he might not distrust them in any particular, they kept him company very much, feldom permitting him to be in any other company; they also carried him abroad with them to feveral of their friends, who treated him very well for their fakes: In the mean time, they being often with him in his Chamber, one of them took the Key out of his Chamber-door, and making an impression of it upon Wax, put it in there again; his Companion keeping our Gentleman company in the mean time: The fourteen days being come, he went and received his money, and bringing it home lock'd it up in his Trunk; And now being furnished with money, he was refolv'd to fit himfelf with Clothes, and proceed on his intended Journey; but he was prevented; as I fhall prefently tell you, for thefe two Rogues having now got the key of the Chamber-door made, and having tryed it, were refolv'd to delay no longer, but catch the Birds before they were flown, as they would be in few days, if they did not prevent it; for this cause they invited him one evening to go out with them to supper, he distrusting nothing went with them, where was better cheer than Company, for all the Entertainers were as very Rogues as these two, however they treated him very civilly, and after fupper fell to drinking, he being defirous to return to his lodging, requested his companions to be going; but they knowing it was yet too early to execute their Defign; defired him to ftay longer, and fo long as he had their companies, they told him he would be fafe enough; he feeing them refolv'd to ftay, was content, and fo they drank on till about eleven of the clock at night; and then, he not being willing to stay longer, they agreed to go with him; and to the end they might not be flopp'd by any Watch, they agreed to go a back-way, which was fomewhat about; this they pretended was the reason of their going that way, but it was indeed, that those who were his entertainers, and who were to affift them in their Enterprize might by going the nearest way, meet them; which accordingly they did, for at the place appointed by all, but our Gentleman, they met, and pretending themselves drunk, jostell'd one another fo, that their fwords were foon drawn, and they affaulted one another, our Gentleman feeing that those who met them were but four, and he and his Company were three, did not question but he might have the better on it, or at least defend himself, and therefore being perfectly valiant, he fo profecuted one of the two who affaulted him that he laid him at his feet; the rest thinking that those two who assaulted him would have performed their Enterprize well enough had hitherto only plaid with one another, in clashing of their swords, but now feeing one of their Companions fall, and doubting more mischief, they all four, as well those whom he thought were his friends as those whom he knew to be his Assaylants, left their jest and fell all upon him in earnest, and he being thus over-match'd, was foon kill'd. The Rogues who were left alive, feeing him, and one of the Companions dead, knew not what refolution to take, but after a fhort confultation, they refolved to carry off their dead Companion, and leave the other there; but the two who were his Companions, fearing he might be known before they had finished their Project, and they might be prevented; they therefore drew their Knives, and like bloody Butchers fley'd all the skin from the poor Gentlemans face, and so taking the Key of his Trunk out of his pocket, and all his Letters, that they might leave nothing about him to cause him to be known; they and their Companions parted: the two Rogues went home to their Lodging; where when they were let in, they were asked where the Gentleman their Companion was? they reply'd, they left him presently after they went out; and this answer serv'd for the present: they then went into their own Chamber, but foon after with their false Key they got into his, and opening his Trunk they took out all his money, and lock'd it up in a Trunk in their own Chamber; and this being done, they went to Bed: The next morning they went out, and carried the money with them to the place where all their other Treasure lay; returning again, intended to get away all their other things that were of any value, in the Trunk; purposing to be gone, and leave that behind them, for they knew it would cause suspition if they remov'd Trunk and all, fo fuddenly; in their removal of their money, they had carelefsly left their counterfeit-key of the Gentlemans Chamber-door in their Chamber-window, wherefore the Landlord coming in there, and feeing a Key, which although it was new yet he believed he had feen it, or one like it; he therefore comparing fome other Keys with that, found that it was like the Key of the Gentlemans Chamber-door; he therefore try'd it, and found that it would open it as well as the other: he was in fome kind of amaze to think of this, and the Gentleman not coming home. he began to suspect that all was not well; About noon he went in again into the Gentlemans Chamber, and knowing that he had lately received a confiderable Sum of money, which he believ'd he had put in his Trunk, he therefore lifted up the Trunk in his hand to poize it, and feel if it were heavy; but it was light enough; they having already taken out all the money; he having fet it down again faw lying by it a pocket-handkerchief, which, he being now grown curious, dilligently looked for the Marks of it, which he found not to be marked with the two Letters of the Gentlemans name, but two others, which were the name of one of the others: Thefe things raifed further fcruples in his minde, wherfore he was refolv'd to observe his two Guests with a more curious eye; and one of them foon after returning, he watch'd him, and faw that he went to his Trunk, and made up a Bundle which he carried out; no fooner was he gone out, but he heard the report which had gone about the Town all that day; that a Gentleman in fuch a place was barbaroufly murthered, and was fo much a Stranger that no body knew him; the Landlord hearing this, his heart leap'd and he was in a very great perplexity, fo that he could hardly stand on his leggs; fo foon

as he was come to himfelf he took a Neighbour with him, and went to the place where the Gentleman lay murthered: It was to no purpose to think to know him by his face, for that was quite disfigured; his skin being fley'd off; but although his Cloathes were bloody, yet he could by them know that it was his Guest, who lay there murthered; he then told his Neighbour what were his thoughts, and withal, that he believ'd he knew the Murderers, and thereupon having acquainted him with all his Doubts and Jealousies of his two other Guests; he and his Neighbour both were of the oppinion that they had hand in this Murther, and therefore they hasted home to fee what might be further discovered; Just as they came in, one of the two went out with a bundle under his arm, which the Landlord feeing, he caufed one to follow him, and dilligently to observe all he He that was fent was fo careful, that he foon after returned, and told him, that certainly there was fome matter of great confequence between his two Guefts, and three others, who were dividing and telling of moneys, and he heard one of the two fay; that now all was well, for he had brought off every thing, and intended to go no more; where are they? faid the Landlord; they are at fuch a house, naming it, said the Messenger: but I followed your Guest to another place first, where he left the parcel he carried out, and waiting some time, he came out of that house, which was a private house; and went to the other, which was a Victualing-house; I, faid he, following him thither, was permitted to go in there, as he did, to drink; he went to his Companions, and I took a Room next adjoyning; where I heard, faid he, what I have told you, and feveral other discourses, which makes me think, that these persons have lately been upon some Defign; but what, I cannot at present imagine. But I can, reply'd the Landlord, I doubt, what I have imagined is true; wherefore Neighbours, faid he, what is best to be done? I pray advise me; they told him the best advice they could give him was to go to the Magistrate, and acquaint him with what had happened; he did fo, and they at his request went with him; being come before the Magistrate, the Landlord told him, that not long fince a Gentleman came to his house to lodge, and soon after him, two more who being well acquainted together, went out (faid he) to supper; the two returned home; but it was fomewhat late, and the third not coming home, raised in me some suspition, which hath fallen out too true; for, faid he, the poor Gentleman is barbaroufly murdered, and lies in fuch a place, I have been to fee him, but, although I cannot know him by his face; for they have fley'd off the fkin, yet I believe it is he by his Cloathes; and, continued he, I very much suspect my other two Guefts are guilty of the murther, for I have found a false Key of the Gentlemans Chamber-door in their Chamber: and fo he proceeded in telling the Justice all the particular observations he, and the person he had fent, had made: the Justice was of their oppinion, that these two men had murthered the third: and therefore fending for Officers, and a Guard, fent immediatly to the place where they were all together, and fecuring them, they were brought before him, he examined them feverally, and fo finding them in feveral Tales, he gathered fo much from their Examinations and Confessions, that he found them guilty; and then being inform'd that one of them had left a parcel at a private house; he caused that place to be fearch'd, and there was found a great deal of wealth and goods; there was the Merchants Silks: the Drapers Cloth; the Challices, and other Church utenfils, and the two Fryars weeds, and much other goods, Commodities, and Difguifes; all which was feized on, and the report of this murder, and the other particulars, running about the City, it came to the ears of the Merchant and Draper, and many others who had been lately robb'd; and they coming, knew and owned their Goods. Our Rogues who were now fast enough for commiting any more Roguries, and feeing that they were discovered, for they were told of all things that had happed: now faw it was to no purpose to deny those several facts that would be too plainly proved against them; wherefore they confes'd all this that I have told you of, and several murders they have committed, among others that of the two poor Fryars; and robbing the Church, wherefore the Parson, and the Church-wardens of that Parish hearing of this confession, came to Paris, and the Felons executed, they and the Merchant, and Draper, and all others whom they had robb'd of any thing, had their goods returned them; and thus faid the Gentleman, was the end of these wretches; and I came to be thus particularly acquainted with this flory, because when I was at Paris, I lodg'd at the fame house where they had done, and my Landlord acquainted me with all these particulars.

The Gentleman having finish'd his discourse, said Mistress Mary, I told him that these two were cruel, and bloody minded Thieves, and that I did not care for hearing any such stories, for that I was much troubled, and methought sensibly concerned in his relation; he replyed, that indeed this was bloody and horrible, but that it was usual to have such murthers committed in Paris; and that very frequently, and continued he, both the Thieves and Pick-pockets, are far more cruel and bold than in England; and although I have given you examples of both, yet I could tell you many more, and enlarge very much upon this Subject, for it is usual for Pick-pockets there, to perform their work in an extraordinary manner, for they are furnished with Arms, and Hands made with Wax or Wood; and by vertue of these, they will frequently and without suspition, pick pockets in the Church; for they will hold two hands with a true Arm, and a salse one, that is an Arm of Wax or Wood up, and in their hands they will hold a book and feem to be bufily employ'd in turning over leaves, at their Devotions, when as the third Arm and hand is picking of pockets; and People standing by, nay, the Parfon himself whose pocket is pick'd, will have very little cause to suspect him that does it: also if they get a man out of the way, and are minded to rob him, they will put a piece of Iron or Brass into his mouth, like unto a Pear, which they call a Choak-pear; and that properly enough; for the party who hath it in his mouth, endeavouring to get it out cannot, for there being a Spring within it which forceth it open. it is impossible to get it out without a Key to it, which they have; therefore they who put this Choakpear into the mouths of any, after they are first robb'd of what they have about them, they are told, if they intend to be rid of that Pear, they must go and fetch more mony, which they must bring to a place they appoint, or else they are like to chew upon the Pear, without any other Victuals, which is like to be hard Dyet to them. But continued he, I shall tell you one of these wax or wooden-handed-fellows, and so conclude.

A Gentleman having had his pocket feveral times pick'd of moneys and Watches, was much troubled and refolv'd if possible to find out, and catch one Pick-pocket that should pay for all; wherefore he advifes with a Smith, an ingenious fellow of that quality, to make him a band of Iron or Steel, with fome prickles about the fide of his pocket, and a fpring towards the bottom, which when it should be touch'd, would cause the band of Iron or Steel, at the top to close together, so that if a Pick-pocket should come there, it would catch and hold him fast by the hand: this he had made to his defire, and then he went to the next Affembly, which was at a tryal of causes, and it was not long e're his project took; he heard his Engine discharge, and the fowl was caught; he knew which Pocket it was, and therefore lookt on that fide one stood with hat off, and both his hands were upon his Hat, which were held up as high as his face; he therefore wondring whose hand he had caught, and feeing the man in that posture, doubted that his Engine had deceived him, and had given falfe fire, but putting his hand towards his pocket he found a hand there, which was invain strugling to get out; wherefore that he might know who this hand belonged to, he got out of the press of people, and the man who held his Hat in that posture went with him; when they were gone a little to the one fide, the poor fellow cryed out; I pray Sir, let me have my hand; how! replyed the Gentleman, I fee you have two already, and therefore if you have a third, you may well spare me that to guard my pocket for the future: the fellow faw that he was caught, and therefore replyed to the Gentleman; truly Sir, it is but a tryal of skil, a new invention, and I hope you will not be angry with a piece of ingenuity; but if you are, rather than fail, if you please to let me go, and not discover me, ile give you any fatisfaction; what fecurity shall I have for that faid the Gentleman? all that I can give, faid the Diver; and thereupon he drew out a purse of money from his own pocket, which it is like had an another owner but lately, but now it helped to make his composition, for the Gentle-man and Pick-pocket going to the Tavern they clapt up an agreement; he not only receiving satisfaction for what he had formerly loft, but also discovered to him the Nature, Use, and quality of a Wooden hand.

CHAP. XX.

Mistress Mary continues the story of the young Gentleman; relates how a Cheat (with two more) pretending to be a Countrey man, performed a very profitable but most comical exploit on a Shop keeper; she is interrupted by the Arrival of her comrades; Meriton Lattroon enters into a Pleasant Dialogue with her; his Indian wife falls in love with Mistress Mary and Mistress Dorothy, disguised in mans apparel: and a pleasant Adventure there upon.

Thus (faid Miftrefs Mary) did the Gentleman discourse of the French manner of Thieving and Cheating, which was after a more confident and bold manner than that of our Countrey-men; and their manner of picking pockets was, I told him a great Novelty; he replyed that he could relate many such tricks that were done at his being there; two more whereof, continued he, I will tell you, and so conclude.

Three Cheats intending a piece of roguery, had aparelled themselves like Countrey-men; and two fauntring in the Street, one of the other went into a Shop-keeper, whom they faw was alone in his Shop, and tells him that he was a Countrey-man, and had born all offices in the Parish where he liv'd: and was now Church-warden, and that he was come to Town to lay out a little money for the use of the Parish; but more especially to buy a Cope for the Parson; and, faid he, I would buy a good one though it cost me the more money: and thereupon fetch'd feveral and shew'd him: he turn'd many of them over, but ftill defired to fee better, at length one was brought which he feemed to like: but, faid he to the Shopkeeper, I doubt it is too fhort: no, faid the Shopkeeper, it is long enough of all confcience, and thereupon measured it upon the Country-man: who said, I cannot tell by this measuring, whether it be long enough or no: but our Parson is a man much about your pitch, and therefore I pray do you put it on, and I shall be better satisfied, the Shop-keeper to fatisfie his Customer, did so; and our cheating Church-warden did affift, and help him to put it on: but in doing it, he clapt his hand into the Shopkeepers pocket, and drew from thence a purse of money, the Shop keeper perceiv'd it, and caught hold of his Customer, but he slipping out of his hand, fhew'd him a fair pair of heels, and the Shop-keeper without putting off the Cope followed him; in the mean time the other two of our cheats Companions acted their parts, for the one went into the shop, and taking the next bundle of goods that came to hand went away, and the third doubting that if the Shopkeeper kept his pace he might overtake his Companion whom he purfued; he therefore having plac'd himself in the way on purpose, catches hold on the Shop-keeper, and sayes, O Lord Master Doctor! what makes you thus distracted? as to run in the streets in this unseemly manner: the Shop-keeper told him that he was mistaken, he was no Parson, and that he was in pursuit of a fellow that robb'd him; by this time our Cheat who was pursued, had turned a corner of a Street, and was out of sight; and the Neighbors coming out to see what was the matter, perswaded the Shop-keeper to go home again and put off that Garment, and then go look for the Cheater; he did so, but there he sound that he had a second loss, which made him more angry than before, especially when he considered that he was without all remedy, not being able to discover who they were that had shown him this clenly conveyance.

Another time faid the Gentleman, a couple of these bold rogues understanding that a Gentle-man was newly come from travel; and having enquired into and been acquainted with many particulars in his Journey, were refolved to get money out of him; and therefore waiting a time and place convenient, and feeing him walking with another Gentleman, one of these bold rogues thus accosts him: Sir, your very humble fervant, I am very joyful to fee you after your return; although you have travelled feveral Countries fince I faw you last, yet you are not one jot alter'd: but you are, replyed briskly the Gentleman, if ever I faw you before, for to the best of my remembrance this is the first time: I shall bring you, reply'd the Confident, to be of another mind when I tell you that my name is Mounficur Brifack. and that you and I travell'd many a mile together, and were very merry at fuch and fuch places, naming them; I hope Sir, continued he, that you do remember that we staid three dayes at such a place, and then departed, having very bad way, and a tedious Journey to fuch a place, still naming the places, and there we met with fuch and fuch Gentlemen, who continued in our companies a fortnight, all the while we staid there; and we came to such and such a place. All this reply'd the Gentleman, and all those Persons I very well remember; but indeed Mounsieur Brifack, if your name be fo, I do not at all remember you; but fince you give me fo good an account of my Journey, I must needs believe you to be acquainted with me in those parts; and since you are fo. I pray how doth Mounfieur Langone? very well, reply'd our Cheat; he intends to be here in short time, and then I will bring him to you that we may renew our acquaintance: I shall be glad of the opportunity, reply'd the Gentleman, and fo good Mounheur Brifack, faid he, till then I shall be your humble Servant; yours Sir, reply'd the Cheat; but I pray, Sir, do you now remember me? yes, yes, reply'd the Gentleman; then I hope reply'd the Cheat, you will also remember that I did you a small courtse in the time of our acquaintance; what was it? faid the Gentleman, that I may acknowledge it; and thank you; no great matter, Sir, faid the Cheat, it was but a friendly office, we ought to do fo for one another at fuch a distance; I do not understand you, said the Gentleman; you are very forgetful, faid the Cheat, but I hope that as now you remember me, fo you will remember to pay me that little money you borrowed of me at fuch a place; I know nothing of it, reply'd the Gentleman; I lent it to you replyed the Cheat, by the fame token, that your Horse was taken lame in one legg, and you were forc'd to leave him behind you, and take another: truly, replyed the Gentleman, the token is good, but I do not remember the other matter; but I hope you will, reply'd the Cheat, and pay me for your Credit-fake before it comes to the hearing of our Fellow-travellers; how much do you fay it was, reply'd the Gentleman; but twenty Crowns, a fmall fum, and foon paid; I know you are not without fo much money about you, and if you please to pay it me now, it will do me as great a kindnefs in receiving it now, as it did you when I lent it; well replyed the Gent. if it be fo, when Mounstear Langone returns I will pay you, which you fay will be in short time; I hope Sir, replyed the Cheat, you will not injure me so much as to put me to stay so long, when you promifed me to pay it at our next meeting, and befides, Sir, it will not be for your Credit to let him or any of our Fellow Travellers know that vou boggle at the payment of fuch a driblet as twenty Crowns: and thus did he importune the Gentle-man for payment, by telling him that he had now acknowledged it before witness, and that if he would not quietly pay, he would compel him to it: fo that the Gentleman to purchase his quiet gave him what he demanded, left, as he faid, he should shame him,

Whilft Miftrefs Mary was bufied in the recital of what was afore delivered, and intending to have proceeded in the fame difcourfe; fibe was interrupted by the return of the Captain, Drugfler, and Scrivener, and Gregory: and her looks and colour difcovered to the Capt. that fibe had play'd the extravagant in the ufe of that liberty & freedom which he freely gave her, and could not contain himfelf from exprefing fome refentments thereof: and addreffing his difcourfe to me in a fleering manner, come Mafter Meriton Latroon (faid he) I shall know you better by degrees, and do fear I shall find you too much guilty of the humour of the Turks and Italians, who unaturally delight in the fociety of young men: they are pretty Smock-fac'd Lads, how do you like them, Sir, if you could procure a change of their Sex, would not either of them ferve for fine play-fellows.

I think (faid I) they are best as they are, without any change; nay, with your pardon, good Captain,I know it an undeniable truth, which your own frequent experience doth, or must acknowledge; their unfuitable habits, I confess at first muffled up, or quite darkned all former knowledge of them: but you must excuse them, if they did unmask themfelves to be known to one, they once preferred before their own fafeties and reputations. Your fweet William was once my little wanton Mally, whom with many more, I first beguiled by hiring my felf in womans apparel, as a Servant maid in a boarding This other whom you call George, was a Country-girl, whose beauty and good feature disarm'd me in the road, as I went on the Pad, and although I had never feen her till then, I was fo paffionately in love with her, that I never refted till I had obtained my defires on her, which effected, I ungreatfully left her.

This faid the Captain, is a thing I was wholly ignorant of till now, although from our friend Gregory I have been informed of the most remarkable passages of your life: such wonderful and unheard of transactions in one man's life, that in his relation I thought him reading to me some Legend of incredibilities.

I replyed that I had referved this fecret with fome others, to be difcovered as occasion should ferve, and that in time, nothing should be hid from him. And now Sir, said I, you nor the rest of your friends must not entertain a jealousie that I participate and share with them in your Mistress's affections; to be plain if your belief of that raife in you any anger or revenge, you will discover thereby your folly most egregiously; for can you expect a constancy from such, who know they cannot live, but by being inconstant; they are like fuch who are upon a trading Voyage, it is not one Port, but a great many that makes up their market; neither are they like fome Merchants who particularly trade to one place, as to Guincy, Hambrough, &c. They are generally trucking, or vending their commodities through the Universe: Mal, faid I, you must not be angry that I thus plainly and boldly difclose the naked truth; pray on, Sir, faid she; I shall exercife my patience in hearing your rallery, but I pray tell me when you are out of breath, that I may inform you of the infirmities and frailties that belong to your more noble Sex, and fpare not ours; you will not be fo unjust to deny me that liberty you take your felf; a match, quoth I, and therefore I shall proceed. When you were but fourteen, you began like a Nut to grow brown at bottom, which you know will then drop or fall of it felf, or I might more properly compare you to forward Summer fruit, which proves mellow in the non-age of the fpring, but rotts by too foon falling, when more follid fruit shall deny the nipping frosts of an approaching Winter. There is a Queen-apple, and a Bitter-fweet so call'd, you refemble the one in the lovely colour, the other in the distasteful Gusto: but since I speak of fruit, the most common resemblance is a Medlar, which is never good till rotten; fuch are you, never finer dreft than in your winding theet. Several of your Sex when married are but a parcel of Crab trees, wall'd in at a great charge. As for thy part, thou art like a honeycomb with a Bee in it, which infallibly flings him that taftes thereof: to be fhort, ye have fair tongues and false hearts; fine faces, but foul Consciences; pride prompts ye to all manner of prodigality, and luft leads ye to that loofnefs, which ruinates thoufands in the destruction of yourselves. To conclude, I could love thee, but that thou art female, and would never have married, but that I thought it best expedient to bring me to repentance. Now Sir faid fhe, I believe it is my time to fpeak, for I find by your straining, you are very needy; you have but little water left by the fucking of your Pump; I fee where your plot lies clearly, by undervaluing me and our Sex, you would put our friends out of conceit with us and others, that you might make a Monopoly of our Sex; be advised Sir, your Patent will not be worth the procuring, if we are fo variable and wavering, as you would falfly make the world believe, you have Marshall'd up a fair company of Metaphors, that your wit might flutter in our disparage-Our failing from port to port to advance our profit, is not fo discomendable as you would have it, fince it is rather our misfortune to meet with fuch Bank-rupts, Broken-merchants, who have neither flock nor credit to barter with us for our wares, Surely your wit is mightily improv'd (fince your poor Poetry you writ to my friend Doll, which the related to me was almost all the reward she had for her lost Virginity) it skipt fo nimbly from Pole to Pole, from Sea to Land, to fetch a Lean starvelin of a conceit, and that was the comparing of us to ripe Nutts, or Nutts brown at bottom as you well know; for all we are flip-shell'd were it not for truanting-waggs who rushing into our Thickets shake us down; we might hang long enough, not like your Crack-ropes: and for your likening us to fruit foon ripe, and as foon rotten, I dare confidently aver that we might remain a long time on the tree, did not fuch unhappy Boys as you are throw stones at us. Lastly, you say our sweets are accompanyed with stings, I know not what you mean, but I am sure you stung this Gentlewoman and my self in that manner that the fwelling lafted nine moneths, and by a Mid-wife was at last delivered of our pain. To conclude, with what force can you condemn us for inconftancy? when every new face you fee shall change your affection, variety shall be as fo many winds to blow your amorous pretences to more points than are contained within a Compass, and when you have had, after a long Seige, the Town (you fate down before) furrendered, you fall a plundring inftantly, and it may be, after this, ingratefully fet the Garrifon on fire: if not, at leastwife curse the time and money you fpent in your Conquest, throwing it off as a thing not worth the managing and keeping: No more (dear Mall, faid I,) no more, what hitherto I have express'd, was but a tryal of thy wit, which fince I find to pregnant, thy better parts, thy mind. I will endeavour to enjoy hereafter.

All the Company was greatly pleas'd with our Drollery, and now faid I, Gentlemen, without trifling the time away too much, fince we know one the others paft lives, and prefent intentions; let us enter into a ferious confultation, how we may advantage each others interest here, in order elsewhere. Although you, Sir (speaking to the Captain) have been in these parts twice or thrice before, yet I question not but the knowledge I have of this Country will prove as ferviceable to our design, as anyothers that have been here a longer time besides the advantage of my projections; the Captain with all the rest readily consented to be advised with me in every thing, as giving me the priority in all manner of Roguery. Gentlemen, faid I, the love I bear my own Countrey (although all Countries indeed, fhould not be fuch ftrangers to us, as not to make them abfolutely our own, when neceffity compels us thereunto) I fay, having a longing defire to fee Europe, and return for England, having now gotten fomething confiderable for a future maintenance, I shall make it my whole business to take up what commodities I can on trust, and with what I have, and my self, I resolve to accompany you homewards; and that I may be the better wellcome among you, I will be affishant to you in the buying your commodities, and procuring you a credit withal.

These proposals commanded both their thanks and embraces, and to work we went immediately. But before I proceed to tell you how, and in what manner we enrich'd our felves by cheating and deceiving the Countrey: I must give you an account, that my she-black divil, my wife, had a moneths mind to no lefs than a brace of white Fosephs, I mean my two Girls in mans apparrel; I confess the temptation was great enough to have deluded any other woman of more Christian principles; when I heard of it, I thought I should have dyed by the excess of laughter, and that I might have the more sport, I ordered my two Females not to difcountenance her amorous defires. I have heretofore inform'd you that she was for feature and stature as handsome, and as proper as most Europeans, and had a natural genius, her Sex is not ordinarily endued withal: in the time of my living with her, I had taken confiderable pains to teach her English of which she hath a competent understanding and utterance. Seeing me go very gentile and gallant, the differted her own

Country fashion, and thought herself obliged to be cloathed in mine, which I condescended to, not so much to please my eye, as to sport my fancy, for they became her as well as a Hat and Feather, Sword and Belt, with a Red-coat would become a Fack-an-apes riding before the Bears.

We had not many English-women among us, however she imitated every one of them in some thing or other, so that she seemed when drest to have borrowed of at least twenty women, and those Habiliments look'd as if they had been thrown on her with a pitchfork. She being extreemly smitten in love with these 2 handsome young man, as she thought them, began now to be less careless in her dress, but what disorders she endeavoured to rectifie and amend, she made a thousand times worse; she consulted her glass, and imagining her sace was not naturally fair enough, that is, not black (for blackness is esteem'd by them as beauty, and tawniness the contrary) I say to correct that natural desect by Art, she got some Lamb black, or some thing like it, by which paint she resolved to be devilish fair.

I wondred to fee my pretty fweetings face, all of a fudden fo ftrangely chang'd, but I concerning my felf but little with her, never demanded how it came, but according to my ufual Cuftome went to bed, and not long after my wife followed me: I had drank very exceffively that day, by which means I flept profoundly and was not fenfible what her petulancy prompt'd her to when I was afleep; but certain I am, fhe did fo all to bekifs me, and fo rubb'd the black paint off her face upon mine, that none could tell which was the blacker of the two in the morning when I arofe.

I got not out of bed till an hour after all the rest of the People in the house were up, and staying somewhat longer above than I usually did, she came up into the Chamber, and perceiving my face to be black, fhe was at a ftand, not knowing what to fay, or do; but at length concluded (as fhe confess'd afterwards) that her God was angry with her for loving any other white besides her Husband, and therefore had taken away his white face, and had given him a black one in the room; the retired down with much more reverance than usual, and was so amazed. that she spake not a word to any below. The Captain and his friends, with feveral of my own acquaintance were attending my coming down, who feeing my face thus discoloured, knew me not, yet knew my voice and clothes, and though I bid them good morrow, they returned me not the like civilty, but instead thereof, ask'd me whether I was not an impudent fellow to counterfeit another voice and wear his clothes? Gentlemen faid I, are ye all mad, or have ye eyes that ye dare own? I am the man I was the last night I am very certain; you may have the fame body, faid the Captain, but the foul Fiend stole away thy head last night for being drunk, and left his own in its room; hereupon a Looking-glass was fetcht, and put it into my hands, but I no fooner faw my face in it, but it dropt out of my hands breaking all in pieces, and with the amazement of this fudden alteration, I was just ready to expire; now did all my former roguries come fresh into my memory, believing that they, with what I was now about to act, had rode poste to the Devil to inform him what I was; that he was come to fetch me away alive, and that he had lent me this hellish face, that I might be the fitter for his company in his Journey homeward.

The Company feeing me ftand fo like a change-ling, could not forbear laughing till they held their fides, at length one of them came, and with a wet cloth rubbing my face, restored it me again, I could not imagine who should serve me this trick, or how it should be done, but at last recollecting my thoughts, I remembred that my wife of late feemed to me to be more than ufually black; whereupon I call'd her to me, and with the fame cloth I made her blacknefs vanish too. She perceiving I was inflam'd with rage and fury, fell upon her knees, and begging my pardon, she told me every circumstance of what she had done and defign'd, concealing her real contrivance; that she had painted her face in that manner to increafe my love, the faid, and that in kiffing me and laving her face to mine, (not imagining the black would come off) the had thus difcoloured my face, and would never do fo again: I was fo far from being Angry with her, that I could not forbear laughing heartily. which renewed the like in my friends; however I charged her never to make herself fairer than she was again, and if I found her pride extend that way, I would devest her and reduce her to the Clout, it being all the clothes the indians wear, an infignificant fore covering; this troubled her more than if I should have gathed her slesh and fill'd the wound with falt, a punishment frequently used among them. Notwithstanding the ill success of her first project, yet fhe was refolv'd to profecute her love but which the loved best, the could not tell, if there had been an half dozen more, the had room enough in her breafts to entertain them, and had affection to have feattered plentifully among them all.

CHAP. XXI.

Latroon's Wife prosecutes her love, the manner of her extravagant Horse-courtship, inviting them to a bowl of Punch, she fore'd them to the Squeak, is discovered in her amours by her Husband and would have poysoned her self to escape his anger. Latroon brings his new Comrades into the acquaintance of the Bannian, whom by feasing him aboard and ashore, they make their friend in their knavish Design.

Y Wife was none of those puling, whining, lovers, who not obtaining their desires, prefently exclaim against the injustice of Heaven in not granting their wishes, and growing fullen to make amends for their Blasphemy, hang themselves, or cut their own throats. She had a certain way of Court-ship peculiar to herself, and a kind of Horselay in her kissing, which was so strong and eager: that you must have a special care she did not beat some of your teeth down your throat; her embraces were as soft as a Bears, I think fully as strong, she hath made me sometimes in a merry humour, cry Oh: and therefore I cannot see how these striplings will escape with life should they be encirkled in her arms.

What kind of Rhetorick she used to perswade them with, I am not yet acquainted, but I understand she boarded them both at once and put them to the squeak, without uttering a word, and had not they sled for it, she had ransacked their carcasses to have tryed their Manhood, this made them ever after shun being alone with her, which made her so mad, that when she hath seen them in company, if by any means she could come at them, she would have pinch'd them by the arms, or elfe where, her fingers being as bad as a pair of pincers. She was ignorant of the way of winning them by Presents, or the subtle infinuation of fine words, varnished with love and Service; she was downright with them, if they would not love her, she would see whether she could make them; but that not doing, she was refolv'd to try whether drunkenness would operate any thing upon them. Whilft I and my new Asso-ciates were gone abroad to hasten our purposes of marching off together, she had prepar'd a Bowl of Punch, with other excellent Liquors, not omitting feveral Dishes of Sweetmeats; she strained her self at that time to the utmost to express her civillity and kindness, drinking often to them till at last she perceiv'd that the strength of those several Liquors they drank had elevated them; then did she in as good English as the was Mistress of, tell them that the lov'd them, and they must love her, that she had never feen fuch pretty white men before, with that fhe caught one of them about the neck, the other fearing they should be now discovered, indeavored to assist her Comrade, and struggled to disengage her hands from about her neck, but she being too ftrong, would not difengage her hold, but by main ftrength brought them both down to the ground together with her; just as my business calling me home, I entred the Room wherein I found my Spouse at Tantum Scantum with the two supposed young-men, tumbling all together promiseuously: I knew they could not if they would, and would not if they could make me a Cuckold, therefore I had no cause to be angry with any, but my Christian Infidel, and yet I had but little reason to be so with her, considering the brutishness of her nature, and barbarousness of her education: however fo fenfible fhe was of the injury she design'd to do me, that taking a Dagger out of her pocket, which she mightily delighted to carry always about her, she would have stabb'd her self. had I not prevented her, by forcing it out of her hands. I faw nothing but distruction and distraction in her eyes, and therefore, watcht her narrowly fhe would not mischief her self, or any else; she feeing that feem'd better compos'd, and stepping aside drawing a fmall Box out of her pocket, which she always made her Vade mecum, and was fill'd with the rankest poyson, she conveyed some of it into a Cup, and offer'd to drink to me, which she would have done, had I not dasht it out of her hand: she feeing me fo careful of her prefervation, imagined I had no evil will against her, she fell upon her knees again, and begg'd of me that I would kill her, for fhe deferv'd it, or take for my fatisfaction as many wives as I pleas'd into the house, and she would not be offended at it in the least; I told her I would have no more wives than she, and that I would forgive her this time, fo fhe would never do the like again.

She now trebled her diligence at home, whilft I exercifed my wit abroad, among the Bannians I invited one of the principal of them home to a treat, a man of vaft fway, and great credit in the Country; and having acquainted my new Correspondents, or fellow Conspirators of the time of our meeting, I ordered them to appear as splendidly as they could, according to the Custome of the Country; and to be noble in their expences, all which they performed so well, that they gain'd a great esteem with the Ban- nian: Moreover I informed him privatly; that the Captain (though an Interloper) was refolv'd not to be behind hand in the lading his Ship homeward, with the best Factor in the company, having Gold enough for that purpose, and that those young men that accompanied him to the indies were the fons of English Lords, that had brought with them great store of Gold to fee this Country, and lay it out in the Commodities thereof: he hearkened to me with much attention, and having always had a very good oppinion for me, believ'd what I faid to be no lefs than truth, and therefore defired me that I would perfwade them that he might negotiate their Affairs for them; this was the thing I defired, which I should have offer'd him, had he not fo happily prevented me by his own voluntary motion, and to encourage his willingness therein, I whispered the Captain in the ear aside, informing him that the Bannian was fully wrought upon, and that now he had not need to fear fraught at half credit, as I shall mannage the matter, I defired him to invite him abroad to morrrow, and what friends he should think to bring along with him, which accordingly he did; after that we had been fufficiently merry together in my house, and though he was somewhat elderly, yet he was a very comely old man, and had wit and heat enough in him to play the Good-fellow: We had fo liberally entertained him (and had fo fitted every thing to his humour, I knowing his humour to a hair) that on his going away, he acknowledged infinite fatisfaction in that he had received, promifing for these civilities his utmost Service and Affiftance; the Captain flopt him in his further acknowledgments, by affuring him they were nothing to what he and the Company intended for him, defiring him that he would favour them with his Company abroad the next day; the Bannian gratefully accepted the proffer, for he was a person that lov'd dearly his belly, and therefore the more willing and ready to accept our English treatment, which he knew was no niggardly one; but had he known what a stale purgation he should have had after all his feasting, he would have sooner swal-

About noon I found the Bannian at his own house, and telling him that he was expected abroad, he made himself ready to go with me, in our way thither we met with some of his most intimate friends, and fome of mine, those which I thought would further our defign I fingled out, and took them along with us. The Captain had made ample provision for us, and understanding from me that the Bannian was obliged to abstain from some fort of meat, he had to be fure provided none thereof; having feafted with all the jollity imaginable, firing feveral pieces of Ordinance according to Command; now Sir, faid the Captain, that you might know we come not into your company empty-handed, or that we will take up any of your Goods and Commodities without paying you for them according to contract, I will fhew you fomething which shall be a Secret to every body elfe, so unlocking a Chest, he shew'd them a great quantity of his own Gold, and his Undertakers; if this be not enough, fee there of this friend of mine fifteen hundred pieces, and of that mans there, five hundred, with a thousand more if occafion should ferve.

This made the Bannian and his friends admire to fee fo great a quantity of Gold, however he feem'd to take but little notice, only faying, you have a great deal of money, Sir, and we have a great deal of valuable Commodities, which you shall not want, but trust them to my procurement for you, and you shall not fail in your expectation; he spake English good enough to let us understand, that he would be our Servant to do our business, and the Merchant too, to credit us if we fo pleas'd. What Goods we took of him at first we paid him ready money before delivered, and by degrees caus'd him to fend fome abroad, and paid him three or four days after: And to the intent we might not be in the least suspected for any knavery, I advised the Scrivener, Drugster. and Gregory (their Hanger-on) to give out they intended to ftay in the Country some considerable while. that what goods they bought, they would fend for England, when the Captain should return thither, and to confirm the truth of this report, they built them an house, besitting the entertainment of them, and the fecuring what Goods they flould procure by way of Merchandize, fervants I procur'd them, fuch as I thought would be for their turn, both Male and Female, but if they intended to have their Victuals well dreft, they must not expect the Cookery from them; however they refolv'd to try the ability of their new fervants, who handled the matter fo fcurvily, that when it was brought to Table, there was not one, but was of a different oppinion in giving a name for what was brought before them, not knowing whether it was boil'd, bak'd, broyl'd, or roafted; for the looks thereof feem'd to have a touch of them all; fo that it was concluded by all that the Proverb was never better verifi'd than now; God fends meat, and the Devil fends Cooks; and fo any Stranger would have taken them, they being of his own fmoaky complexion. Wherefore to avoid these foul inconveniences of fluttith feeding, it was agreed on, that Mall (alias William) Doll (alias George) notwithflanding their Breeches, should officiate as Cooks, their friends thould be caterers, and their menials Skullions.

CHAP. XXII.

Latroon in order to his returning to Europe gets a great deal of Goods, most on credit; he suspects his wife of some villanous Design, discovers her wicked inclination, and hints at the common cause of Cuckoldry. She under pretence of loving visit poyson'd one of the supposed youngmen, and had like to have dispatcht the other, and afterwards kills her self: her Assistant in this Murther was found not far dislant from Bantam torn to pieces by wild Beasts, three days after the FaEl.

In this Equipage our friends were in, whilft the Captain, and my felf were daily bringing in Grift to the Mill; the Bannian according to his promife, with speedy fedulity procur'd us what ever we desired, and to encourage his Industry had daily (almost) encouragements for his quick dispatch. Our business now ran on wheels, neither did the pleasures of our new Houskeepers slacken in their carreer, they had every thing which the Country afforded, and more, for they had two such matchless European girls, which all India could not parallel, whose luster was the brighter by reason of those dark and dusky soils which were always near them.

But damn'd be that curfed inftrument that totally eclipft the light of those two Wandring slars, which must ne'er shine more in our Hemisphere. Who would have thought a wife, after so much penitence and submission (being obsequious beyond imitation) fhould renew her revenge, and profecute it to death. It is true, she found me remis in the cooling of her amorous Heats, but that from the first I used her to, that the might not expect it when it came, as a duty, but a courtefie, or a very fignal favour, by reafon hereof the was void of frequent expectation; had fhe been as white, and as lovely fair as any of my own Country-women, I would have ferv'd her in the like manner; if I intended to make my wife abfolutely my own. For in my time I have observ'd at least an hundred Examples of this nature; Women, whom I am confident might have ran the Race of their lives in the way of modefty and honefty, had they not been chased or over heated at first by the oftentatious humour of their hot brained Bridegroome, striving to out-do himself, that he might purchase the esteem of being a lusty man excelling others in strength and vigour; but when the wife shall finde the satisfaction of her defires discontinued. fhe will be apt to think her husband was too prodigal at first, and so became Natures Spend-thrist, and now thinks of no other thing than how she shall be supplyed by others. Others again are like some childifh appetites, who feeding on fome excellent Diff, they never tafted of before, and being exceeding pleafant, eat beyond meafure, thinking themfelves never to be fatisfied, fo getting a furfeit, ever after loath what they lov'd, the very fight thereof will even naufeate their flomachs. I fay by flinting my wife after this manner, the could not suspect that by rambling abroad, I disappointed her expectations at home, fince cuftom made her believe me indifferently honeft. But her revenge was grounded on the Basis of equity, for since she was so far from being jealous, that the allowed me to make use of others, fhe judged I could not in reason dis-allow her the enjoyment of one or so, especially of my own com-

The removal of these two young men (as she supposed, and in that belief courted them to her embraces) she verily believ'd was occasion'd by me, and design'd that she might have no converse with them. Whilst they were in sight of her, she pleas'd her self in viewing them, but being depriv'd of that hourly happiness, she had not so much prudence as to conceal the resentment of her loss, and the injury was done her by me, but express (in her manner) to my very face things that carried with them suspitions of a dangerous confequence.

For the prevention thereof, I feemingly show'd much kindness unto her, giving her a many good words, & granting her with all leave to vifit those two young-men, with this provifo, she would not wrong me, and all this was to pacifie for the prefent, till I was ready to go from the implacableness of of her revengful spirit, which is an Inmate properly not onely in her, but in all the Indians her Countrey people. She feem'd hereat to be very well fatisfied, but so impatient she was to have a review of them, that she went from me immediately to them, at the fight of them she represented her joy in so many antick shapes, and formes, that all which were prefent burst out into a great fit of laughter, which she conftrued in favour of her felf, supposing from hence, they were over-joy'd to fee her; and what made her believe it the more, was their welcoming her to their new house, in the best manner they could, drinking to her so often (in the best liquors they had) till she was half Sea-over; the heat of the Perfian-wine she drank, gave fire to the old train, which should kindle the Magazine of Love, which lay covert in the Cole-pit of her hellish lust; and now breaking like a Hand-granado, the pieces of the shell could not fly faster than her arms did about their necks, there was no warding them, fo that they were forc'd to fubmit to the cruelty of her overpowerful affection. But when she infisted upon the complement thereof, they bade her then defift, for they were refolv'd never to wrong her Husband in that nature, and threatned her, that if she would not be civil, they would acquaint him therewith. Hearing them menace her after that fashion, she retreated and fate down at a distance, and seem'd fomewhat penfive, but having fpoke fome few words to a Black that past by her in the Indian tongue (which I would have understood had I been by) to which there was a fudden reply; fhe feem'd to throw off her melancholly and re-affume her jolly attempt, telling them that the next day she would come again, if they would make as much of her as they had done then; they told her they would.

I vifiting them that evening, they acquainted me how welcome they had made my wife for my fake, how the had renew'd her love, and how prepofteroufly the had manag'd it; in recital thereof we had good fport over a Bowl of Punch: to avoid the dangers of going home late I bade them goodnight. In the morning early coming down I found one of their female Slaves close in difcourfe with my wife, who feeing me vanished; I suspecting nothing, went to the Bannian about my butiness, and that day we had fo much business to do, that it was near night, before I could visit our friends, to acquaint them what progress I had made therein, and how near it was brought to confummation. But I had no fooner entred the doors, but my ears were entertain'd with the doleful groans of my two difguifed Amazons, who lav upon a Matt on the ground, foaming at mouth with the Scrivener & Drugster, & Gregory attending them. offering their utmost assistance, which was to little purpose, fince they were ignorant of what they ail'd: as foon as I faw them, I knew they were poylon'd. having feen feveral in the like condition (a common practice among them upon the least suspition of an injury defign'd, or an offence already receiv'd) but knew not what remedy to apply, and whilft I was in confultation with myfelf what was best to do. I faw Malls teeth drop out of her head, and Gregory going to raife her head, the skin and hair with it came off in his hands like a Perriwig, fo did the hair of the other; fo ftrong was the poyfon administred, that Mall died in less than half an hour after the reception thereof; but Dorothy escaped ever to a miracle.

This fad accident had like to have converted the house into a Bedlam, for the three young men which had attended them in this difafter, were fo ftrongly distracted at the fight of what had happened, that I thought the Devil had just then by a reentry took possession of them, or that they had taken the same potion of Poylon, which was very near as bad; believing it would work as fubtlely and as nimbly on them as it had already done, (Principiis obsta) I ran with might and main for fome Sallad-ovl, a Jarr where of I brought in the twinkling of an eye, Drink, drink, faid I, to them all, quickly, quickly, one after the other, as fast as you can, which they did, not knowing any reason therefore, but that I commanded them: having even gorg'd themselves with it, and being not able to drink any more, I poured it down their throats till I had almost choak'd them, or rather drowned them therein, they cried out to me, for the love of God to forbear, or I should kill them, judging me to be mad indeed: as they were evacuating what they had too plentifully received, the Captain whom I had left with the Bannian to follow after me, came in, who asking me what was the matter? I told him particularly. He could not but flew fomething of touble, but having been acquainted with all forts of losses and miseries from his Cradle in a manner by traverfing to and fro the Universe, he bore this with a patience agreeable to his courage and Man-hood, and now our friends having difembogu'd the Oyl that was within them, flew'd all the appearances of perfect health; now feeing them in a condition to return an answer to what questions I should propound to them, I ask'd what ftrangers they had entertained at home to day? they reply'd, None; but, faid Gregory, let us first see whether a certain shedevil of ours be within, and then I shall tell you what I have observed; upon this we search'd for her, but could not find her, it feems the fame Black I found in the morning discoursing with my wife, when having done this execrable murder, by the infligation of my other devil at home, was fled, as more plainly by and by will appear. Said Gregory, not full an hour fince; whilft we were at the farther end of the house busied about our wares, Mistress Mary, and Miftrefs Derothy, commanded fome wine to be brought them, which was accordingly done by this female we now mifs, and brought in a midling Cocoa-nut bowl; they were just drinking the third time round, as we came in, nay, now faid Mall, my little merry Grigg, here's to the Miltrefs of thy affections, fpeaking to me, and drinking heartily, I looking into the Bowl to fee how much was left, this Black dasht the Bowl out of my hand, and because there was but little in it. I judged it onely to be an effect of her rude petulancy, and fo did the reft, taking no further notice. Prefently our two friends grew extraordinary ill, and though we were three to two yet they would have found work for as many more had not death thus bound one of them hand and foot, and the other feemingly dead for the prefent: I will lay my life, faid I, I know where there is another of the Confpirators, fo taking the Captain with me only, we made all the haft we could to my own house, and found by the extraordinary number of people therein, that fomething more than ordinary was the matter, and fo there was, for my wife with her beloved Dagger, had with one home ftabb made a hole through her heart, wide enough for halt a fcore lives to go out a breft without jostling one the other.

I was not troubled to fee her thus weltring in her own blood, but that she had not liv'd to be punish'd fuitable to the crime she committed, if any punishment could be invented. The Prefident of Bantam hearing of this horrid Murder, fent for me, to whom I gave an ample relation as I could by information, or otherwife, who feemed very much concerned, and immediately dispatcht feveral in the fearch of the Coadjutrix to the Murderefs, about three days afterwards they found (fome ten miles diftant from Bantam) a female Carkcafs, turn all to pieces, the limbs thereof were gnawed in that manner, that there was little flesh upon the bones, onely the head was untouch'd, and fome of the company that had feen her before, would have fworn it was the fame, and therefore it was agreed upon to carry it to the Prefident, which they did, and prefently order'd to be fastned on a long Pole, for a future terror to fuch like Malefactors, especially the Natives.

CHAP. XXIII.

Latroon and his Comrades about to leave Bantam and go to Surrat, having done lading their Vessel, shew some tricks to prevent suspition of marching off, He sets fail from thence and meets with an Enemy, an account of a most desperate and horrible sight with him. He gives you an exact account or journal of that Voyage from Bantam to Surrat.

Aving buried our dead, we refolv'd upon a General Counfel, to fee what we had done, and what we had left undone. We found that half our ready money was disburft, and that we had above half as much goods upon Credit, as our whole fum amounted to, and now refolving to make a final and fpeedy difpatch of all, I got all my Estate aboard not leaving any thing valuable behind me, excepting only what was in the house for the accommodation of my Guests, having an happy opportunity of conveying my own Goods with the Captains, and others that were concern'd with us the Scrivener, and the rest did the like.

That very day that we intended to fet fayl, we were all merry at my house with the Bannian, and promifing that the next day we would pay him what was in arrears, and also lay out five hundred peices more ready money; he feem'd highly pleas'd, leaving him, we shew'd our felves through the whole Factory with much Gallantry. The reason that we did not take in our whole loading in this Port, was the great number of Dutch Veffels which lately came into the road, and more daily expected, which we knew would not only obstruct our Credit, but raise the Commodities of that place. We were fain to fcuffle hard among our Country-men for what we had already, there being at that time at Anchor in the harbour feveral ships. And having ready money pretty flore we refolved to take in the reft at Surrat, which place would fecure us well enough, and what we had deceitfully got. Having spent most part of the day in shewing our felves in the Town, about Three of the Clock in the afternoon, it being the fourteenth day of Fuly, we got aboard, as if we intended to feaft it, for there was none of the whole Factory, or our Bannian efpecially would think us fo indifcreet to fet fayl with half our fraught, that was my policy, and being unfuspected upon that account we might with the greater facility and fecurity march off. Getting all our Anchors aboard in a trice, we looft our Sayls away we steer'd between the Main and Paulo pan jan, all the next day till fix in the Evening, being then athwart the South-falt-hill, we steered Southwest and by west, and west and by south, but from that hill we fteer'd west south west, having the wind for the most part at East south cast with much rain, which afflicted me grievoully, for my fears of fome pursuing us would not let me quit the Decks till I thought we were out of all danger in being followed. The fixteenth of this moneth at noon we efpy'd Hippins Island Eastward ten leagues off, having steer'd all night West South west. Latitude about 6 Degrees 38 and Longitude from South-falt-hil 6 Degrees 44 West, the wind at south-east with the help of a Currant for twenty four hours, from the fixteenth to the twenty ninth of this month, we had the winds between the south-cast, and cast north east, with most intolerable rains at Noon, being in latitude 11 degrees 59 south, and longitude 20 Degrees 35 Westerly; we failed this month on several Courses, four hundred ninty six miles.

Mistress Dorothy being indifferently well recovered though a bad spectacle to look on by reason of the skin of her body all coming off with her nails, such was the malignity of the Venome; I say, speaking as well as she could, defired me to write some lines on her dearly beloved dead Comrade, knowing that my sancy did ever incline to measure lines, and so to please my self, more than to give her satisfaction, I composed these Verses.

On the death of his Indian wife, and his old Wench.

Start not my Muse, what Paradox is this,
That the same cause works both my Woe and Bliss?
Here lies my bliss, a more than brutish Wise,
By her own Butching hands bereft of life.
My Woe lies here, my murder'd Joy, Alas!
What Wicked hand durst bring this III to pass?
Hells consistory sate within that brest,
Which sent my Love to her Eternal rest.
How happy had I been, had the Blest Powers, Enlare'd her Minutes, and have made them Hours.

Turn'd these short hours into long days, that I Might dread Deaths approach, when she should dye. But she is gone past all recal; and we Can only weep and sigh her Elegie.
Though we don't mourn she can no Mourners lack, Each Nature is at her sad death in Black, Methinks they're hoarse with crying, and their votes (Being sad, and doleful) do besit their Coats.
The Clouds dropt tears; the Ayry-Quire (which shies Over our heads) do sing her Obsequies.
Shall we be dumb, whilst Birds do use their Art? No let's in Sorrow bear with them a part, When that y've done for Mall, bereft of life, Rejoyce with me, dead, dead's my wicked Wife.

August the ninth, steering Northerly forty two Leagues, we found per observationem the Ship to run but thirty seven Leagues, which is five Leagues less by reason of the Current which sets us the Southwards Latitude at 6 Degrees 24 Longitude 36 Degrees 58 West from the Salthil. This afternoon we were in the Latitude of the Changus, to the Westwards of them, not seeing any sign of danger, the variation is good help if heedfully observed, finding about 22 Degrees when you are in 7 or 8 Degrees of Southerly Latitude, a Northerly couse will go clear of all danger. The twelfth of this moneth we crost Aquator, steering North, Northeast, Latitude 10 Degrees, Seconds 85 Digits Southerly Longitude 36 Degrees 51 digits West, the wind at South and by West, the variation 19 Degrees, Seconds 35 Digits West.

The twenty-fifth of August we lay a try with main course, and mizen our Drist North 9 Leagues, the wind at South west, a fresh Gale. One of our men taking our main Top-sail, cryed out a Sail, a Sail. In a quarter of an hour by the help of my Prospective, I could discern her to be an Enemy of considerable force, about fome forty four pieces of Ordinance. She made towards us with all the speed she could, and we to shorted our way, bore up to her with all the Sail we could make, so that we setch't up one the other quickly although we had but thirty fix Guns, eight less than she carry'd, and having sewer men withal we seared her not, but ran up board and board with her before we fir'd a Gun, and then we poured in a whole broad-fide into her, whilft we pepper'd them above with whole Vollies of fmall shot: they returned us the like kindness, which kill'd us four outright befides what were wounded. Our Captain behav'd himfelf very manfully, and fo beftirr'd himfelf in the fight, fhewing fo clear a courage as would have animated a very Coward to fight, as for my own part the meer observation of his magnanimous behaviour, infus'd into me more valour than I thought my felf capable to contain, or able to make use of: my Landwater Soldiers, the Scrivener and his two Companions, by the Captains example, and my encouraging, look'd Death as boldly, and as daringly in the face, as if they had intended to look him out of countenance, though at first no shot, either great or small went whiftling by them but what made them dap their heads, as if that would fecure them; that Bullet which injures man never tattles in his ear the enfuing danger; that Bullet that whiftles in the Air, proclames your crown as fafe from cracking, as is the Goofe after fhe hath past through the Barn door stooping lest her lofty head should knock the top thereof.

There was not any in the Ship exempted from Service, every man as he was Quartered not budging, but doing the utmost he could to offend his Enemy;

a brave young flout fellow (whom I shall never forget) flanding by me and my Bantam Comrades) a fhot came and took away his legg with that fury, that it rebounded from the fide; falling, he feemed not a wit daunted, but called out aloud, Courage Captain, I warrant you Victory, if you will but fend down this Foot and Legg of mine to the Gunner, and let him fend it to them instead of shot, and I shall laugh to fee here, how it will kick the Arfes of those infolent Rogues; Gregory standing by and feeing what had past, though something scar'd, yet would not discover any fright, and to hide it the better, commended the brave refolution of the man, and as he was laughing at the odness of his conceit (poor Fellow) a fhot came and took away one fide of his face, fo dved immediately, now it may be faid, he could laugh at him but with half a mouth. This last unhappy Bout fo fcared the little valor which was in the Scrivener, that he inftantly quitted his flation, and diforder'd more men in his way to his supposed fafety, the Hold, than twenty Troopers could have done in the midst of a Foot-company, a little afterwards the Drugster attempted to do the like, fome of the men in the waste, feeing him upon his flight (just as I was moving on the same design) cried out, knock him down, knock down that cowardly fellow with a handfpike, thinking they had meant me, being on the motion, I endeavour'd to prove the contrary by giving him a fore pelt over the noddle with my Mufquet which laid him a fleep on the Deck; was highly commended by our Captain for fo doing, telling me that two fuch fellows among a thousand men, nay an Army of ten times the number, might by their fear occasion their total overthrow.

The Drugster recovering got to his Quarters, and thought it better to dye fighting than to be kill'd for being afraid to dye, to work he went with a Blunderbufs, and fired it fo often that he durft not charge it again till it was cooler, my Mufquet was in the like condition. By this time the Enemy began to fland away from us, but we were refolv'd to keep her company, and make her pay for the trouble and cost she had put us to. We perceiv'd she had much a doe to keep herfelf above water, fo that we were not long before we came to bear again upon her, which we did fo efficaciously, that by a lucky shot penetrating her powder room the blew up, we being to near her, I verily thought the would have blown us into the airtoo, as the did her own men, part of which fell down into our Ship, as if you would have featter'd faggot flicks off a house top: we had not above fix men in all kill'd, and about nine wounded, none mortally, which were immediately committed into the hands of an excellent Chirurgion we had aboard, who took fuch a special care of them that before we came to Surrat, they were all perfectly cured.

Our thip receiv'd fome dammage which was rectifyed by our Carpenters as well as they could for the prefent, and fail'd forward in our voyage. The next day we were forc'd to lye a Try again, which we did the thirtieth day, the wind at South-west allowing each days drift. The one and thirtieth we thortned fail all but our Sprit-fail, top-fail because of falling too foon with the Coast of India. This month we ran eight hundred fifty two Leagues on feveral Courfes.

From the first to the fourth of September, we stood away only with a sprit-fail top-fail the course and distances, &c., observed having a fair wind Westerly, but the next we steer'd East and by North, with Sprit-fail and fore-topfail. The fifth from twelve to fix (per Compass) East five Leagues, having at four of the Clock had ground fixty four fathome Oazy fand, then fet more fail and stood in North, Northwest till fix in the morning, our depth in running the Course of seven Leagues was fifty five, fixty and fixtyfour Fathome in Latitude, about 20 Degrees, Seconds 42 and Longitude 30 Degrees. Seconds, 3 Digits Weft. On the fixth day we steer'd East and by North, till four in the afternoon, at which time we faw Land, it was low and Sandy banks, with fome Trees, and a white Tower or Church which may be feen four or five Leagues off. This place was judged by those men of ours that had fail'd often this way, to be fourteen Leagues to the westward of Diu. This evening we took a small boat not far off Poramena, bound to Chichauho near Caule, they had only three horses in her, having nothing in her worth making prize, we difmist them the next day without taking ought from them. The feventh and eight dayes we flood off and on, expecting to meet with some Jonks. On the ninth we met with a Jonk of Gogo, coming from Mare Rubram, or the Red-Sea, richly laden, which we took, imagining we now were made for ever, but the Commander foon dasht all our joyes, by producing a pass from the Prefident of Surrat, upon fight hereof our Captain durst not detain her. I was on board her and having feen fome part of her Cargo, I judg'd by that the richness of the rest, and therefore perswaded the Captain to make her prize though the had a hundred prefident paffes, but he would not yeild, knowing better the danger than I did, and fo difmift her to my great forrow.

On the tenth we took a Jonk belonging to the King of Succatore, bound as they faid, to Surrat, (the Devil was in our Captain to believe a word they faid if ought might be gotten by them) and had aboard of her little that was confiderable, faving fix horfes, and bast to make Ropes withal, wherefore he dismist her.

On the eleventh we anchored in twenty fathom three Leagues off the shore, to give notice if any Jonks should pass by in the night, they stood to the Westwards; and met a Jonk coming from the Redfea, but this cowardly Hulk feeing our Boat, fuppofed her to be a Scout from some Man of War not far off, ran and sheltered her felf under a Fort some sourteen Leagues to the West-ward of Diu-head. This Ionk had some Europeans aboard her, which plyed their fmall that fo that our Boat was forced to leave her. and coming aboard us was fent out again better provided with men and arms to lve as they had done before, to meet with the faid Jonk, but in the night came fix Sayl of Friggats inflead of her and anchored by them. Our desperate daring less than little Fan Fan, would not leave them (knowing who they were) till the had foit that little Venom that was in her and then retir'd, this fo allarm'd us that we got all fayls loofe; and weighing up our Anchor the Cable broke, fo our Anchor was loft; we flood in and having spent some fhot on the Friggats not with standing there was such inequality in the number, they stood away for the shore and left us, however we would not let them pass so. but being some seven Leagues from Diu-head, in the night we flood in again among ft the Friggats, but there being little wind and a light night, they crept under the fliore, from the twelfth to the feventeenth we plyed to and again, standing off in the day, and in again at night, feeing thefe Friggats every day, but could not come at them; they lay there to give the Jonks notice of us as we supposed.

The eighteenth we made up to the Land of Saint John's fourteen or fifteen Leagues off, near which we took a boat that came from Danda ja-vapore, bound for a place near Diu, out of this boat we only took two Meflico's and a boy, and fo difmift her; anchoring at eighteen Fathome Oazy (being high water and little wind) in Latitude 19 Degrees, 48 Digits, about nine Leagues of shore, Valentines pike,

East and by South, per Compass.

The two and twentieth we faw a Jonk and gave chase to her, setching her up we found her to be a great Junk of Surrat, bound for Acheen with Merchandife, having a pass from the President and Councel, therefore he medled not with them; but in the afternoon came to an anchor in two and twenty Fathom, about thirty Leagues of shore. The weather was gufty with much rain, but never did I hear fuch peals of Thunder, nor fee fuch great and continued flashes of Lightning: at four in the evening the next day we anchor'd at eighteen fathom within fix leagues of Damon, the wind at North North caft, and variable, with fuch terrible claps of Thunder and Lightning, that my friends, the Scrivener and Drugster would have freely parted with all they had to have been at the bottom of a Cornish Tinn-mine. They envied now poor Gregories condition, accounting his mifery a great happiness, for fince the Element of Water had received him into the Womb of her protection, the Element of fire might as foon give him a new foul asto detriment his body, theirs being now minutely expos'd to the mercy of its uncontroulable fury.

On the twenty fifths evening we anchored in ten fathom reddish clay, the Pagod East, North cast, per Compass, and the trees of old Swalley, North, North-cast, about three Leagues off; the next day the wind being at North, North-west, we turn'd up and anchor'd in ten fathom, the Toddy-trees East and by North, per Compass.

Lastly, having laid one buoy on the tonge of the fand and another on the point of the Main, we came over the Barr, the least water is four fathom and half at half flood, so we ran in till the Souther-Toddy-tree bore South and by East per Compass, and there anchor'd in eight fathom water. This month we failed not above one Hundred and seven Leagues.

CHAP. XXIV.

Latroon and his friends arrive in Swalley Road, they go ashore at Surrat, are entertained with other Captains of Ships lately come to an Anchor, by the President; he discovers an old Mistress of his and his old fellow servant, waiting on a Captain in a disgnifing habit; he renews his acquaintance with her; she tells him what befell her after his unworthy shipping her to Virginia, and the cause of her coming for India. She enters into a League with Latroon to cheat her pretended Master, which she did, the manner how. They fail together from Surrat homeward.

The next day after our coming to an Anchor in Swalley Road, there came in to us fix fail of Dutch-ships from Nova Batavia; and two days after came in four English ships more into the same Port. One of the Captains meeting with a Fleet of Friggats entring in at the Rivers mouth, was boarded by them and unhapily blown up, himself and others of his Company escaped, but were miserably burnt with powder. The ship drave into Swalley over the Bar and was tow'd on shore by our Boats and Barges, but all in a manner confumed by the fire; there was a Dutch-ship fought with the Friggats this while, which Sunk three of them, and in the fight there was three more furpriz'd, the first by the Charles Barge, the next by our Long-boat, which we doubly mann'd, and the last by the Dutch: they were but of little value, being laden with Paddce, Beechleaves and other trifles.

Now did our Captain command the Skiffs to be mann'd, and taking me, the Scrivener, Drugster, with some of the Ship, we went ashore, and presented our selves to the President, who wellcom'd us in the best manner hecould, and to speak the truth, his entertainment was magnificent; whilst we were frankly drinking Healthsto our friends in England, there came into us (who came ashore that morning) the Captains of the other three Ships, with their Chief Officers, as also a great many Dutch Commanders and their Attendants, we used to say The more the merrier, and so found it, for the President as he was a very generous man, so he was prudent, and therefore by his noble deportment towards us, was resolved to oblige us both.

We on the other fide, ftrove to out-vy each other in gallantry of Spirit, and in this manner we continued feafting three days, fwimming in an Ocean of Liquor.

In this time of our Jollity I minded especially a young man that waited on one of the Captains; he had a very Sweet countenance, but his Complexion was very much Sun-burnt by travelling; I did verily believe I had seen the sace before, and therefore very much eyed it, which he perceiving fixt his eyes as often on me, for I never cast my eye that way where he flood waiting, but I found him still looking towards me.

My heart renewed private intelligence what he was, but my reason could not so much as guess from whence it came; for by the extraordinary motion thereof beating strokes on my brest as nimbly as a Drummer a Travale on his Drum-head; I look'd on him as one I knew, neither was I alone thus, for at that distance I could perceive that the sight of me did put him into a strange consusion.

As I was contriving how to have fome private conference with him, his Mafter commanded him to take fome of the Boats Crew and go aboard and fetch him fomething which he wanted, he had no fooner receiv'd the Command, but cafting his Eyes on me he endeavor'd to tell me by them, he had an eager defire to fpeak with me.

He going out, I withdrew from the Company, defiring their excuse for a while and follow'd him, but coming near him he trembled fo he could hardly move a foot forward, feeing him in that agony, I asked him what ailed him? Bade him not be afraid, that I came not after him to mischief him, or injure him in the leaft. I believe, faid he, you intend me no harm now, but it would have been well if you had never done me any. How! replyed I, it is impossible I should be so cruel as to injure a face so innocently harmlefs as thine appears: yes, Sir, you have, faid he, and were it not for fomething within me I have no name for, I would be reveng'd on thy very foul for the abuse thou hast done me; I have now no longer time left to difcourfe you, but to-morrow meet me under the Southern Toddy-trees, and there I shall not fail to let you understand the miseries  $V_{2}$ of ——, and there he dropt his tears fo fast that he could hardly see his way before him. I was so amazed at what I had seen and heard, that there I stood as a thing immovable, speechless, and almost sensless; staying somewhat too long, the Captain came out to look me, and sound me in this posture staring up into the Skie; What's the matter man? said he, what wonders dost thou see there, thou dost so gaze? I tell thee man, said he, this is no proper time nor place to take an observation, we are now at Land; but he knew not what observation I had taken, if he had he would have spoiled the Instrument if he could Recollecting my felf, Your pardon good Sir, faid I, I protest you drink too smartly within, so that I was forc'd to come out to fuck in some little airy refreshment. This shall not excuse you, quoth he, therefore come along with me. Coming in he told the whole company in what a rediculous posture he found me, and did fo Romance upon it, that he made them all laugh. One while, faid he, he was telling the Clouds he faw, pleafing himfelf with the feveral monftrous fhapestheybore, though I could not fee one in all our Hemisphere. Then he turned his ear up to the firmament, as if he were hearkening to the Sweet harmony of the Sphears, and in my conscience, if I had not prevented him, I had feen him madly dance by himfelf without one stroke of Musick. After this he turn'd his eyes upwards again, and fixing them there awhile, the nine heavens or firmaments were fo transparent to his fight, that looking through them, he recounted their particular names to himfelf in order as they were pofited. He would have proceeded but that the company would not lethim, for my own part he might have talked till dooms-day without any interruption from me, my thoughts being wholly imployed in fearching out the meaning of what the young man lately spake to me. I observed after his return, he could not or would not look once towards me as long as I staid. That night we parted fome staying ashore, others going aboard; but I, knowing what business I had to do the next morning, lay all night with one of the Factors, a true Toper, and one that I had been formerly merry with in London. I got up early and went to the place appointed, where I staid not long e're I saw him whom I expected advancing towards me, I arose to meet him, fo walking together we chose a place where we fate down, which was both convenient, and fecret for our purpose. As I was about to speak he prevented it, by calling me base, faithless, perjur'd man (I starting up, laid my hand on my Sword) Nay hold, Sir, said he, think not to expiate your offence by murdering the person against whom they were committed, so pulling off his Perriwig discovered some short red hair? do you know this colour, faid he, which once you told me you lov'd beyond any other? Here is the fame Dimple in the Chin, and Mole on the Lip, and the fameskin (stripping open his doublet) which you have unreasonably praised for its excelling whiteness; these were the flatteries you used to delude a poor credulous maiden, whom you not onely sham'd but ruin'd. You cannot forget your matchless treachery in feducing me aboard a Virginia ship, in whom I was carry'd thither and fold, you hoping by that villary to have been for ever rid of me and mine.

I now faw who fhe was (my fellow fervant when I was an Apprentice) and knowing what fhe faid to be a truth, I ask'd her forgivenefs, acknowledging all my unworthynefs to her, and protested if she durst trust me once more I would make her amends for all, at which she smil'd (for she ever lov'd me too well to be angry with me) I taking hold of this advantage did so press her to a forgiveness, that she could not deny me, having feal'd it with a thousand kisses: and now dear Jane, said I, I have a longing desire to know how you spent your time in Virginia, and how you came hither with this Captain; that I shall do briefly, fhe replyed.

 $VV^{Hen\ I}$  faw that you had fo cruelly trappan'd me, and that all your love was nothing but a deluding pretence to enjoy what you could, and be shut of me afterwards as I faw you had done, I attempted to fling my Self into the Sea, but being prevented in that, I betook my self to my Cabbin where for grief I lay the whole Voyage so desperately ill that none had any hopes of my life, for my Child dying as I suppose for want of those that should carefully looke after it. Arriving at Virginia, and anchoring at Potomack River: feveral Planters came aboard of us, and made a quick riddance of all the Passengers but my self, none offering a pipe of Tobacco for me, for I was grown fo weak I could not stand, and so lean that I was a meer skinful of bones. The Master seeing me in this condition, and judging I could not live two dayes to an end, commanded me to be carried ashore to dye. A Planters wife that was very antient, seeing me lie in that miserable and deplorable manner, took pity on me, and took me home to her house, where the proved so good a Nurse to me that every day I did sensibly amend. Being well, there was a great contest between the Husband of this good old woman, and the Master whose Servant I should be, a Suit was commenced, and upon tryal the Master was cast he putting me a shore as useless to him, acquitted himself of all future trouble with me. I being clear from him, my good Patron and Patroness discharged me in open Court for having any thing to fay to me, for what necessaries they had provided for me during my sickness, being now a free-woman I had a hundred good matches offered me, all which I refus'd; there were some of the great ones too courted me for their luft (for I had now recovered my complexion, and my eyes had shaken off that dulness which had clog'd the swiftness of their motion) but all these temptations prevailed not, the memory of you had too large a power over my heart than to yield to any one else. But length of time began by degrees to extenuate that efteem I had of you, so that I did not behave my felf so reservedly as formerly I had, but assumed a great deal of freedome. One day my Master (as I now call him) coming to the house where I was (for his Ship then rode in the River not far off us) took fo great a likeing to me at the first sight, that as he hath confess'd fince, he was never at quiet but when in my fociety: So that in a little time he had fo won upon my affections, that my carriage towards him fufficiently demonstrated how dearly I loved him. To conclude, he made a perfect conquest of me, and as the earnest of a perpetual tye, he fully enjoyed me, and promised marriage if I would go with him as foon as he came to Weymouth in the west of England, where stood his Habitation. I greedily fivallowed all his perfivations Calthough one would have thought me more wary, having been fo notorioufly cheated by you before,) & the time coming when he would fet fail, I march'd down to his Ship with as many as would have compleated a Regiment which followed me, looking upon me as the most absolute mirror of Chastity which ever arrived in those parts, joyful I was to return to my native Country, and as glad was my overcomer in that he had obtained fo pretty a play-fellow to pass away his time in his paffage homewards. In feven weeks we came upon the coast of England, and was by the stress of weather put into Plymouth-sound, where we rode with much difficulty between the Island and the Land. The third day after our anchoring there, the wind ceasing though the weather was somewhat hazy, he went ashore, and taking none with him but my self Coxswain and his Crew. I wondred what he meant by it, my fond hopes prompted me to believe that here he would perform the promise he made me at Virginia, but I found my self deceiv'd; for he dismist the boat after he had fill'd their skins full of wine, and commanded them to wait upon him in the morning.

There being now none left but he and I together; Dearest, said he, be not troubled at what I shall tell you, and it shall be never the worse for you. I have a Wife and Children at Waymouth, although to gain my ends of you I pretended to have none; she is the most jealous woman in the world, and well she may, for the knows there is no woman in the Creation much more deform'd than her felf, wherefore this I would have you to do that I may continue your company; you shall change your feminine habit for what is masculine, under which disguise you shall pass as a young man I have met with abroad, which for fancy's fake I have chosen to be my Companion in my Travels. I thought I should have funk into the Earth to hear him make this new confident proposition to me after so many vowes and promises to make me his wife, but gathering courage, I flarted out of his hand and would have gone down stairs, but pulling me back, what faid I, are all my expectations come to this? must I be only your wandring whore at last? have I left fo many wealthy matches at Potomack for this? no, I am in mine own Country, in a place where I am not known, & I will wash and scour for a lively-hood rather than submit so basely after so many worthy proffers. Notwithstanding a thousand resolutions I had to leave him; yet fuch was the subtlety of mans By infinuation, that he made me unfay all that I had faid in less than half an hour; and I agreed to everything he would have me do. Leaving me at the I avern he went immediately, and bought a fuite (which he guest would fit me) with Hatt, Shooes, Stockings, and whatever was requifite to cloath a young man fashionably, and brought them to me upon tryal, they exactly fitted me. Now because we would not give any cause of suspition to the people of the house where we were in changing my habit, it was concluded on between us to walkout of the town somewhere, he being well acquainted with all the places about the town, made choice of Catdown, where in the cleft of an hollow rock I unchas'd, throwing my proper habit into the Sca, and although it was somewhat immodest I was fore'd to beg his help in my new metamorphosis; he had procur'd me a very Alla-mode Perriwig, but before that would fit me he must play the Barbar himfelf, which he did by cutting my hair off close to my head. Being now clad with every thing requifite from top to toe, we made towards the town again, where entring the former houseweverein, wedrank and were very merry, having a noise of musick, having supped one bed ferr'd us without suspition; in the morning came the boat for us with the doctor in her, who asked my Maftervery ferioufly for the Gentlewoman, hereplyed she had kindred and friends in this place and that she refole'd to flay with them a while; then been quired what that young man was; O, faid he, he is of my former acquaintance, who having little to depend on here, is refold d to fee the world abroad with me. Coming aboard our Masterneed not make a repetition of what he had already faid, the Doctor did it for him: now did we fet fail fleering for Waymouth which we did reach in a little time.

I was entertained in his house with much civility from his wife, and the fervants observing what respect their Master show'd me, paid me the like. There was seldom a day wherein he had me not to a Tavern, sometimes with company, but most commonly alone, and this life I led for fourteen moneths; at the expiration of which my master being employed by some Merchants in a Voyage to East-India, took me along with him by which means we have the wonderful hap to see one another again.

My Jinny having ended her discourse, I endeavoured to endear myself unto her with all the outward demonstrations I could devise or imagine, protesting for the future I would never violate my faith to her, that she and I would run our fortune, live together, and she dying I would voluntarily do so too, to accompany her to the other world.

Fearing left I should detain her too long, and give her Master any cause of suspition, I dispatch'd her away, and foon after went aboard our own ship, but before I went I appointed her to meet me there two days after. The Captain, my felf, and all that were concern'd, went roundly about our business, for since he had gone beyond the bounds of his commission, he was refolv'd not to return home with her, but convert Ship and goods to his own use; this in secret he acquainted me with, as knowing my ingenious rogueship would be very helpful and affistant to him in all his enterprizes; and that I might oblidge him to me in an absolute bond of friendship, I seem'd to make him my Cabinet-counfel in all my affairs, and did really inform him of the truth of the last Adventure, knowing I could not carry on my defign without his privity and help.

He did much wonder to hear me tell him that I had here also discovered another of my wenches in man's apparrel, but his wonder turn'd into rejoycing when I told him how this wench should enrich our Stock by robbing her or his pretended Master of his Gold and what else he had valuable, and could hardly rest to think how I would effect my design. Fear not, said I, his Gold is all our own, therefore let us lay out our own as fast as we can, in the commodites of this place. The Dutch thought we had the Devil and all of mony, to see our goods come tumbling in upon us so fast, so that with what goods we took in at Bantam, and what we receiv'd here, our ship wanted but little of her full fraught.

The time was come wherein I was to have another Mefs of discourse with my Finny, who was punctual to her time, and there before me at the place appointed. And after some sew amorous ceremonies I feriously told her that it was my intent never to part with her during life, fhe answered that it was her defire, and that she would run any hazard to bear me company; well, faid I, make your felf ready to go along with us, for we are refolv'd to fet fayl within thefe two dayes; that I shall (she faid) and know that I will not come with empty hands; my love shall neither be burthensome to you, nor expensive; how prithee, how said I, why thus, my pretended Mafter, as I have told you loves me dearly, expreffing it in whatever way I defire, and to let me fee how great a truft he dares impofe upon me, and what confidence he hath of my fidelity, I have the key of his Cheft wherein is contain'd 8 hundred Jacobus's, befides a box of rough diamonds with other stones of price, all of which, or as much as I can carry off handsomely will I bring to thee, so much efficacy hath my first Lover over me that I could be content to undo all the rest to raise thee. I told her the notion was very fuitable to our prefent affair, and that it was the best and easiest course I could propound for our happy living hereafter, and that when the faw any white thing hanging in our shrowd she should then fall to her work, which should be the token of our being all ready; which fhe could eafily do at any time, for the Captain being almost continually a shore and she with him, it was but waiting for the boat (upon the fign given) which at her command would carry her aboard and bring her with the least word ashore. Moreover that having got the prize, fhe should presently make down to the Toddy-trees, over against which we lay at Anchor, and upon the fignal of a Handkerchief, we would fend our boat inftantly ashore to receive her. All which according to instruction was exactly perform'd, the Captain whom she requited in this manner for all his love being at that time dead drunk by an invitation of the Factors of Surrat.

Having got my double Treasure aboard, and what lading we defir'd, our Hold shut up, our Anchors weigh'd, and our Canvas spread, away we sail'd over the Bar, with an hundred shot after us, for our Country-men as well as Hollanders, concluded there must be some damn'd inexpressible Treachery in this our suddain sailing, neither giving notice some days before, or fairly taking our leaves by fireing of Guns according to Custom; besides they knew we had not taken in our sull Lading. Let them fire their hearts out we valued them not, in derision we fir'd a Gun at stern, and so stood to the Southwards.

I knew very well this female confident of mine would effectually do the business we had plotted together, and so to divert my felf and make sport with the Captain of the discovery of my Rival, I wrote some few Lines and nail'd them on a Toddy-tree on the shore directed to the said Captain, which I knew would be discovered by some or other, and carried to him the verses were as follow.

Noble Captain.

'Twas a close plot y' faith, but 'twould not hide From me your wench, which should have bin my Bride; You chang'd her Garb, but could not change her face: Nor change her heart, where once I had a place Nere thence to be remov'd although she show'd Some love to you, the Debt to me she ow'd. Love was a stranger to her till I came. Whom seeing lov'd, and loving lost her fame. Sated with her delights I basely prov'd Th' ingrate that loath'd what I should still have lov'd. I turn'd her off, well might she then perplex Herself, and curse th' inconstance of our Sex. To be reveng'd, with me she did confer, To do her right on those that wronged her. I was the first, but me she did forgive, Because as one, we must together live. You were the next, whose crimes are manyfold, Yet have fued out your pardon with your Gold: Your fubtle Wheedlings cheated her belief, And would have filch'd her heart to play the Thief. You stole into her Secrets, so that she May at Loves-bar charge you with Felony. For thus purloyning, stealing hearts away, And being caught you now shall foundly pay. She voies to me, she'l spare you not a bit, But keep intire the Purchase of her Wit. What Protestations, and what Oaths you made, Were broke by you as foon as they were faid. Your great pretences and your bouncing Stories; The idle flashings of your fancy'd glories; All which the minds not, fince the hath required A Treasure which so long we both desir'd.

Now we are now almost quits (against your will)
This is the Sum that must discharge our Bill:
Imprimis so much; lying by her side,
And breaking promise, made her not your Bride.
Item for changing Petty-coats for Hose,
And doing something, which I wont disclose.
Item for making such a pretty toy,
Your wanton Mistris, and your Cabbin-boy;
Whom Morning, Noon, and sometimes very late,
Fail'd not to make your constant Trickry-mate.
Thus stands th' Account, and now we're even just,
Discharing you of what we did intrust,
If not quite broke, for some new Credit look,
You ne're shall enter more into our Book.

I shall not trouble you with the particulars of an exact Journal of our voyage from Surrat till we came to Venice, to which part we were bound, but only give you some light touches by the way.

The last day of April we cross'd the Æquator, and the first of May made a new way by judgement, and by observation our way was four Leagues to the South-wards, having a rowling Sea out of the Souther board. The fourth of June in the morning we faw the Island Mauritius and a little after three or four small Islands appeared also; we stood in betwixt Mauritius and these Islands, and when we were thwart the point of Rocks which lye on Mauritius fide, we edg'd off towards the Island, giving that point and breach a good birth; our depth was twenty, and two and twenty fathom hard ground, and being within one mile of the westermost rock, we had twenty four fathom, the wind being at fouth east, we left into the shore about a mile diftant from it we anchored that night. Herewe rode near ten days, refreshing our selves with what the Island afforded, as Goats, Hogs, and fresh fish good ftore. It is reported here are many fish rank poyson, we did eat all forts, as Mullets, Lantarasks, Whiskers, Rockfish and Garfish, and many others, but found no harm by feeding on them. We fet fail hence and about 28 Leagues distance from Mauritius, we pass'd by an Island call'd the Moschachenas, near which we fprung a leak, that each hour we pumpt above two hundred and fifty strokes, it being gusty whether and a great Sea out of the South-east, but by our Carpenters it was happily ftopt, although it was under the next timber abaft the well near the Keel, which by rummidging the Hold they found it fo to be. The next place we anchored at was the Island of Fohanna, here we had much lightning and thunder, the wind having been out of the Sea in the day, and off shore in the night. This place affordeth very good flesh great quantity of fish and fowl, we had a Bullock for ten long red Cornelion heads; we had also excellent Oranges and Lemmons, the people are very loving and friendly, having two Governours or Captains among them, the one call'd Androm Pela, and the other Maffe Core, they defired of us no other money for ought we bought than those red heads. Sailing from hence we fprung our main top-maft, which our Carpenters taking down fisht it and got it up again the same day. On the third of September in latitude 16. d. 33 the wind at South eafl, we faw the Island of St. Helena, to the west-ward of the Chappel thereof we anchored a mile diftant, the Captain caused the skiff to be hoisted out and fo my Finny, the Scrivener, Drugster, and Doctor &c. we landed at Lemmonvalley. Here with fome Guns we carried with us we kill'd Hogs and Goats, otherwife it is hard to take them, running at the fight of us up inacceffible craggy Rocks. In ranging through the Isle, our men found divers Oranges and Lemmon-trees but no fruit thereon, the Dutch having been there as we fuppose, had gathered them, as appeared by their names on certain Stones and Trees; we caught here Mack rel, Breams and Borettoes good store.
